Tax cut fever could mean a mellow session

BY MICHAEL McCLELLAND SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBER

For the first time since Dempsey Barron ruled the Florida Senate with an iron hand in the mid-70s, many legislators are predicting they will be able to finish the coming session on

If you think that means they're expecting a relatively quiet session, you're right. There is no great overriding issue like reapportionment dominating the legislators' time, no stormy battle between senate giants like Barron and W.D. Childers waiting in the wings. Instead, many legislators see the 1984 session as an opportunity to refine existing statutes and work on long-term issues like population growth and water

That does not mean the session will be free of controverses. Several issues coming up are certain to bring out the legislators' combative natures.

Foremost of those issues will be wetlands legislation and the question of merit pay for teachers. Other issues likely to spark a few fireworks are hospital cost containment, interest to banking and, strangely enough, Amendment One

Amendment One, also known as "Citizens' Choice" and Proposition One, would have placed sharp restrictions on the revenue Florida could take in Virtually all of state government and countless private organizations had been gearing up for an all-out battle against the amendment. All that changed sort of-when the Florida Supreme Court struck the amendment off the ballot as unconstitutional last

The court's ruling caught everyone by surprise, and may have thrown more doubt on the session than it cleared up With the amendment on the ballot, the Legislature was expected to be very fiscally conservative and try to avoid giving pro-amendment forces any fuel for their fire.

Now that Amendment One is off the ballot, at least temporarily, no one is quite sure how to react

"I get the word, the grapevine word, that they'll probably be just as careful to keep it from coming back," influential Senate Dean Barron, D-Panama City, "But I sort of responded that they might be more reckless as a result of not having to face Proposition One."

The ghost of Amendment One is likely to haunt the session from begining to end. It is a ghost that could rematerialize in one of three ways. First, federal courts could overrule the Supreme Court ruling and put the amendment back on the ballot. Second, Amendment One backers could re-write the measure and, if they can get 300,000 petition signatures before August, have it back on the ballot in a new form. Third, Amendment One supporters could simply bide their time, learn from this defeat, and come back with a stronger amendment and a better organization in 1986

Many state officials, in fact, are concerned that the Supreme Court's action could provide a voter backlash. Attorney General Jim Smith said less than a week before the court ruling that knocking the amendment off the ballot would be the worse thing the court could do, and Grahm himself conceded it could generate considerable resentment amoung frustrated voters. The court had been far more liberal in previous constitutional referendum rulings.

The legislators know all that, and may try to head off a

Sociologist Harry Edwards

BY CURT FIELDS

Harry Edwards has a message, one he knows inside and out, a message that's earned him death threats and governmental harassment

He learned it first hand, graduating from high school in East St. Louis unable to read or write but able to enter college because of his talent for football. At San Jose State, Edwards went to work. It was an uphill struggle, but 'You

against

Edwards credits "a few good teachers" with helping him overcome his illiteracy.

Those teachers refused to lower their standards because he was at an educational disadvantage, Edwards said, but made him work harder to measure

And measure up he did, Edwards went on to get a doctoral degree from Cornell University, Now his will' regarded as today's foremost authority on the s sport, Edwards is a professor of sociology at the University of California-Berkeley. He's written half a dozen books and is a frequent traveller on the lecture circuit. Edwards visited Tallahassee Wednesday and Thursday and in two short days managed to sandwich in three lectures and, graciously, an interview during his lunch Thursday

Between bites of salad and sips of white wine, Edwards talked about his fight to get an education

"I realized I was basically responsible for my own thing," he said. "I woke up very early to that. It dawned on me, that this was it I either had to pull it together or it was going to be East St. Louis forever, and that was one thing I knew I didn't want. I was very fortunate."

Edwards graduated with an A-minus average and was awarded a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship when he left San Jose State. He was contacted by a couple of professional football teams-San Diego and Minnesota-but he opted for

In 1968, Edwards was the primary organizer of the Olympic Project for Human Rights, an action which got him and the others who took part vilified in the news media. The project's goals were to bring attention to the status of black Americans and to promote an awareness of black athletes' responsibility to their community, according to Edwards.

Tommie Smith and John Carlos, who in 1968 raised their fists in a black power salute while on the Olympics medals stand, were banned from amateur athletics. Yet, Edwards pointed out, when George Foreman put on a political demonstration after winning a gold medal in boxing by waving a tiny American flag in the ring, he was applauded Lee Evans wound up becoming a coach on the Nigerian track Kareem Abdul Jabbar and Lucius Allen were team. considered cranks, said Edwards, because they boycotted the Edwards himself received numerous death threats, was fired from his job at San Jose State, evicted by his landlord (who happened to be a San Jose State booster) and placed under investigation by the FBI. In fact, Edwards said, files he obtained under the Freedom of Information Act revealed that both the FBI and CIA had attempted to limit his employment opportunities and engaged in other forms of harassment as well.

He was hired at Berkeley shortly thereafter. The FBI promptly arrived to try and persuade the university to fire but eventually cut a deal to the effect that Edwards' employment would only be temporary, he said

In 1977, still at Berkeley, Edwards applied for tenure and what is perhaps the nastiest tenure fight in collegiate history began. Despite his credentials, the sociology department voted his application down 10.9.

"The media asked me what I would do about it," said Edwards. "I charged it was racist and politically motivated and said I was going to turn out the lights at Berkeley, I was going to be the last to leave.

Then things got funky," continued Edwards USSR picked it up (and when) American negotiators would mention, and they were right to do so, Soviet dissidents, the

Visiting prof explains crisis in Poland

Warsaw Gdansk The Lenin Shipyards Solidarity Poland has been in the news a lot over the past four years, and for many Americans, the "Polish question" is a troubling one. Some Americans like to see the labor unrest and periodic food shortages in Poland as positive proof the communist system doesn't work. Others worry with each outbreak of fresh demonstrations that the Soviet Union might invade Poland and that any "provocative" U.S. statements about Poland could make a Soviet invasion

What most Americans don't know is to what degree U.S. foreign policy on Poland actually influences events within the country, and why the crisis in Poland came to the boiling point early in the 1980s.

Longin Pastusiak, a sociology professor with the University of Warsaw, will be speaking at Florida State University today on both "The Sources of the Polish Crisis." at noon in the Leon Lafavette Room of the Union and "The Sources of U.S. Polish Relations," in Room 70 Bellamy at 9 a m. and Room 65 Bellamy at 11 a m.

Pastusiak's extensive works-30 books, and over 200 articles for daily and weekly journals - have generally been about East-West relations, American foreign policy, German problems and Polish-American relations. He is currently the Director of American studies at the Polish Institute of International Affairs, and editor of the Polish Political Science Yearbook

The session

Curt Fields ...

As often as we rail against the legislative circus that comes to town every spring, the fact is that Florida's legislature is one of the most progressive, most responsible governing bodies in the country. Over the past few years, especially, the Legislature has begun, finally, to deal with the problems which have dogged the state for decades. At last, Florida is looking to the future, planning growth and extending the benefits of the state's fits of prosperity to more of its citizens.

All that was jeopardized by the proposed Amendment One to the state constitution, which was knocked off the November ballot by the state Supreme Court last week. But if Amendment One is down, it is not out. Its specter still looms overthesessionwhichbegins Tuesday—in the promise of the Limit Government Committee to fight on in the Federal courts, and in the fact that many Floridians don't understand why taxes have increased by over $1 billion in the past five years or why state spending has doubled.

From some quarters come suggestions that Amendment One was borne of government's inherent greed, its lust for power. Some legislators say they'll try to pass their own tax-limiting constitutional amendment this session.

They're wrong, though. We agree that Florida could stand some tax reform—sales taxes are inherently regressive, the homestead exemption freezes out renters, who include students and some of the state's poorest citizens—and we hope said reform gets consideration this session. But Florida is one of the least-taxed states in the nation. By one count, Florida ranks 49th out of the 50 states in terms of percent of personal income paid to state and local governments.

The real problem is largely one of public relations—of explaining that the state government is acting now to correct its laxity over the past 20 years. The penny gas tax increase passed last session, for example, was necessary because the state's roads and bridges had been allowed to deteriorate to the point that they threatened both the economy and peoples' lives. An $80 million boost in public school funding was approved to allow the state's schools—especially teachers' salaries—to compete with other states' systems. Efforts to improve schools, manage growth and protect the environment will continue this year.

Government leaders have to do a better job of justifying the taxes they've passed to meet the challenges the state faces. They can do that by behaving responsibly this session.

First off, they need to kill the turkeys—the state gifts to municipal governments designed more than anything else to make hometown legislators look good. Florida spent some $200 million on local school construction projects last session, many of them bribes to win individual legislators' support on other issues. That's got to stop. It wastes money and breeds cynicism. It's a luxury the state cannot afford.

Leaders might also try to keep the squabbling to a minimum. Power struggles between influential legislators—the near fist fight broke on the Senate floor a few years ago is an extreme example of a recurring problem—waste time and money; they make citizens wonder whose interests government leaders are trying to serve—their constituents' or their own. This year, one cause for concern will be the campaign for House speaker, a fight which wasted three weeks of the chamber's time last session. But if they can keep the infighting down, the legislators might even manage to finish the session on time—something that hasn't happened in years.

The potential for a good, responsible, short session exists. House and Senate Leaders and Gov. Bob Graham say they want one. Let them deliver. They hold Florida's future in their hands.

Editor

What was the meaning of the "Stupsd Comic?" (Flambedu, March 28) What an incredibly insulting piece of pointless trash. If it is space you need to fill, there are plenty of worthwhile things going on in the community and at Florida State. It wasn't funny—it was degrading to women and blacks. I am sure many would be thankful if the Flambeau would refrain from printing any more of these "Stupsd Comics."

Now, a word or two about the Flambeau in general. Of your paper, we expect journalists with integrity, presenting unbiased reports of events. In my three years at FSU, I have yet to see the Flambeau exhibit any of these qualities.

March 25, I ran in the Delta Chi run for the March of Dimes. Even though the race was only three miles long, there was an ambulance stationed at the two-mile mark. A man on a bicycle led the race and a man on a bicycle followed behind to make sure every one stayed on course.

Traffic control was excellent even though there was some kind of Greek event near part of the course.

I believe it was Delta Chi's little sisters that organized the race, and in general, I think they did an excellent job.

Pet adoption

Editor

The Leon County Humane Society would like to thank all those who came by the pet adoption booth held March 10. This was the first booth we have been able to hold since December. You see, for years we have been holding monthly adoption booths at the Tallahassee Mall, but are now no longer permitted to do so. (The new owners consider us inappropriate for their present image.)

So, rather than remain "homeless," we decided to have our most recent booth at the Spay and Neuter Clinic on Tharpe Street. The response to and turn-out for this experiment was heartwarming. This booth not only provided us the opportunity to find good homes for quite a few animals, but also the gratifying chance to meet many people sincerely interested in animals.

If you are considering a pet, or are simply an animal lover, please come visit our booth during Springtime Tallahassee. Or watch for the newspaper classified ad announcing the May per adoption booth at the Spay and Neuter Clinic.

A job well done

Edito

I wanted to take this opportunity to publicly commend the Florida State University police in their handling of a recent dog biting incident. I realize that in the larger scheme of things, this incident is minor and yet the police involved (Capt. C.S. Hooker, Don Grabill, and Officer Taylor) offered my wife and I more than adequate time and concern. This left us with a positive impression of the professionalism and compassion of the FSU police force. Not only did they handle the actual incident well, but their follow up of the case was very thorough, timely, and handled with concern for the people involved. It is incidents like this that will reverse any negative stereotyping that police officers have incurred in the past. Again, I offer my thanks and compliments to the FSU police.

Spay your pets

Please consider spaying and neutering your pet(s) as soon as possible. The season is upon us when it is crucial to do so. The cost of sterilization is negligible when you consider what you will go through if you do not spay or neuter. Raising and finding homes for another unwanted litter takes time and money, as does patching those involved in a "lovers' quarret." Pregnant dogs can become sick and/or suffer complications.

Besides, won't your conscience bother you if you contribute to the per surplus problem here? Will all the adorable and helpless puppies and kittens go to good homes? Will your roving male or female pet be impounded and costly to claim? How many will end up the victims of gruesome "research" experiments, fraiternity initiations, dog fights, or become neglected, abused, smashed on the roadside, hopelessly lost, disappear? Many more than you realize, unfortunately.

Investigate spaying and neutering before it is too late. Call your yet or any other listed in the phone book. They will gladly explain the advantages of this procedure, and dispell the common myths associated with spaying or neutering. Make your pet(s) better, happier, more enjoyable, with an improved lifestyle that will benefit both of you. Please.

Soviets would ask about Mr. Edwards in California," Edwards told his audience Thursday night. Letters began to pour in from around the world. Other departments on the Berkeley campus got involved. A California legislator threatened to withhold funds from the university if tenure wasn't granted. An African dignitary at a White House dinner in his honor, leaned over to President Carter to ask about the Edwards situation. Everybody was getting in on the act. Finally, said Edwards, Carter called the Berkeley chancellor and told him to get things worked out. That's how he got tenure, Edwards said. In keeping with his promise to be the last to leave Berkeley, he has it written in his will that upon his death, he's to be cremated and his ashes scattered on campus.

Now Edwards travels about telling athletes—particularly black athletes—how the system works on them, and what they can do to survive

The main thing, according to Edwards, is to take responsibility for yourself and what happens to you.

"If black student-athletes fail to take a role, nothing else done by anyone else will matter," Edwards said Wednesday night: "You can't free a slave against his will. (There is racism, but) after all that is over, it still comes down to us. It doesn't make any difference how many whites are being hung that day if I'm standing on the gallows with a rope around my neck."

Black families must play their part, said Edwards. Blacks have set their own children up for exploitation by pushing the possibility of a pro sports career, he said. If you count all black athletes, black trainers, black coaches and everyone else, from all sports, less than 2,400 black Americans make a living to professional sports, according to Edwards.

"One of about 54,000 becomes a professional basketball, football or baseball player," said Edwards. "(Experts estimate) there is a one in 22,000 chance of being hit by a meteorite. You've got a better chance of being hit by a falling star than becoming a star. Too often our children concentrate on OJ, Dr. J, Kareem J, and Reggie J, then they wind up with No J—no job."

Of course, Edwards, who has felt the full brunt of white society's racism, does not lay all of the responsibility at the feet of the black community. Institutionalized racism shares in the responsibility. "We have gone from the pre-Jackie Robinson, Jim Crow era to an era of Mr. James Crow, Esq.," said Edwards.

Black athletes are "stacked" in certain positions (like wide receiver or running back in football) and are seldom placed in authority positions, Edwards said. Black athletes, on both the professional and college level, are merely disposable gladiators who are replaced as quickly as they fall, according to Edwards.

Despite this, it still comes downt to the player, in Edwards' opinion. Asked by an FSU athlete what just one player can do, Edwards replied, "Hang in there. Proceed intelligently, know the terrain." Just remember, Edwards said, a coach doesn't "bring you there to get an education; he brought you there to win football games. Remember, everybody is exploited. The only people not exploited are dead, and the worms are getting to them. You're going to be exploited—just don't get ripped off."

Of the problems athletes face, I dwards said drug abuse is one of the most urgent. He told of the Illinois athlete who went to the trainer because of a neck problem. The trainer called it a bruise and left it at that. The player came back and was sent to the team doctor, who called it a cyst. After the season ended and the player had served his purpose, said Edwards, he was sent to get a second opinion from an outside physician. Diagnosis? Cancer.

This attitude of getting as much out of the player as possible permeates the sports establishment and is one of the major factors behind the abuse of performance drugs like steroids and amphetamines, said Edwards. Athletes can help fight the problem, but outside pressure must also be brought to bear on the sports establishment, Edwards said.

The responsibility for the problem of recreational drug use lies more firmly on the athletes, according to Edwards, though it isn't entirely their fault. "They're trained to be unidimensional," he said. That's why the three leading off-field activities for professional athletes are, 1. watching soap operas, 2. playing cards; and 3. listening to tape decks, according to a study Edwards cited. "The exact same pattern was found in one other place—San Quentin," Edwards said.

Pro football players, for example, go through a routine consisting of grueling practices, boredom, more practices, more boredom, then the game for the week. They get banged up and maybe get a little something from the trainer for the pain. But what happens when the shot wears off at 3 a.m. and the trainer isn't there? He turns to his own local anesthetic, cocaine, Edwards said. And there is pain. The wife of a San Francisco 49er told Edwards she went through 20 to 30 sets of sheets a season because she frequently has to cut them around the various spots on her husband's body where the sheet has stuck to his sores and scrapes.

Edwards cited Carl Eller's statement that he was "on a ride that could only end up here"—"here" being $600,000 in assets, $1.5 million in debts and a $150,000 a year cocaine habit.

"(Athletes) have to realize that cocaine is so good you shouldn't even try it once." Edwards said, "It's like sex. If you don't get involved in a sexual thing, you can go your whole life and not miss it. But you get involved with it once and you can't stop except for physical disability or death. Athletes have to treat cocaine the same way."

Athletes should also let each other know that it isn't letting the team down to refuse being shot up in order to play with an injury, said Edwards.

L.A. games could prove a disaster

BY CURT FIELDS

The 1984 Los Angeles Olympics are going to be a disaster in Harry Edwards' opinion.

Edwards was a driving force behind the 1968 Olympic Project for Human Rights which included a boxcott of the games by many black athletes and protests by some of those who participated. In Tallahassee last week for a series of lectures, he said choosing the 1984 Olympics as a backdrop for a major protest would likely be a huge mistake. Any mass demonstration would be met by 1,700 nervous, unorganized, trigger-happy people with, as yet, no clear lines of command, Edwards said.

"Calling a mass demonstration in that climate would be like organizing a parade through a mine field," he said

Right now there is a turf dispute between the Los Angeles Police Department and the FBI over whose special tactics squad would be used in case of a hostage situation in L.A., said Edwards. So many local police districts are involved, since the Olympic site is spread out over several California counties and even across the state line, that the agencies involved can't decide on what radio frequency to use, he added.

The Olympic site is so spread out because the gaines are being conducted on a fixed bridget, which has caused the committee to develop a "bottom line" philosophy. Edwards said. As a result, the committee has chosen to use existing facilities for events instead of building new ones. Thus, the Olympics are being held wherever the committee could find a suitable facility already built.

They're spreading this out over "the most congested freeway system in the U.S.A.," said Edwards. "(Experts) say at least two-thirds of the spectators at glamour events such as gymnastics, swimming and track must ride buses," Edwards said. "Normally, only one-fifth or so attend sporting events by bus in Los Angeles."

However, crowds for the games may not be terribly large after all. Edwards does not expect all of the nations invited to take part to actually do so. The most notable stay-athome will be the Soviet Union, Edwards predicted.

"If I had to put my paycheck on it, I'd say they're not going to come," Edwards said. Their only incentive to come would be to defeat the U.S. on its frome turf—something most Olympics watchers feel would take place if the Soviets do participate, he said. However, the disincentives are many.

While the L.A.O.O.C. was reassuring the Soviets they would be welcome, said Edwards, the California Legislature was passing a resolution saying the exact opposite. On the visa application all visiting athletes must fill out, questions concerning ties with the Communist Party are located in the same section as questions about criminal records and communicable diseases. Edwards asked if Americans would feel welcome if questions about Democratic or Republican party ties were treated in a similar manner.

A Soviet source told Edwards during a recent visit to the Soviet Union, that the Soviets are worried about security in L.A. The Soviet team would be housed at three different sites in a city with the largest Korean population in America, and the memory of the downed Korean airliner still lingers there. Should something go wrong, how would the Soviets gather their team together and get out? "Our problems just begin if we come," Edwards said his source told him.

Perhaps that's why Peter Ueberroth, head of the L.A.O.O.C., accepted the position of Commissioner of Baseball with these words to the major league owners, said Edwards, who learned of the incident from a fisend of his in baseball: "I'll take it, but you have to understand that in the wake of the Olympics, you'll have a commissioner who'll be one of the most maligned men in the country."

revived Amendment One by enacting government growth limiting action on their own. The Republican minority has already written an alternative to Amendment One, and others may be forthcoming.

"As one who has consistently wanted to see a reasonable and responsible control on government growth, this comes as a God-send," said House Majority Leader Ron Johnson, D.—Panama City. "Finally, maybe we're going to see this sort of legislatively-mandated control over government growth."

In addition, reliable sources who asked to remain unnamed said that Graham would announce the creation of a select blue ribbon task force to study and exentually suggest ways to limit governmental growth. Graham will reportedly make that announcement in his welcoming address to the legislature

A spokesperson for Graham refused to either confirm or deny that report.

The big battle of the upcoming session may well center around wetlands legislation. The issue of whether or not Florida should statutorally protect its vanishing wetlands is shaping up to be a classic confrontation.

On one side are the environmentalists and South Florida legislators who fear overdevelopment is destroying the fragile ecosystem upon which all life in the state depends—especially through groundwater pollution. On the other side are development, forestry and farming interests, who fear their control over their property may be lost in a tangle of red-tape.

The major wetlands legislation out so far is a bill by Rep. Jon Mills, D-Gainesville Mills' bill has been endorsed by Department of Environmental Regulation Secretary Victoria Tschinkel, but has not fared well in early committee hearings.

The problem with Mills' bill, or any wetlands legislation, critics say, is deciding exactly what is a wetlands and what is not. Mills' bill originally would have defined wetlands by the amount of water normally present on a tract of land Other proposals have focused on the type of vegetation found in a certain area.

Critics of the bill say those definations are too vague Farmers in particular fear they would not be able to make even minor improvements on their property without state permission, simply because a small livestock watering pond is present. Those critics do not necessarily oppose wetlands protection, but feel that Mills' bill needs major changes before they could accept it.

Growth management, including wetlands legislation, is one of Graham's top four legislative priorities. Earlier this year, Graham bluntly promised that he would not allow overdevelopment of wetlands to continue.

"We certainly don't want to hinder agriculture," said Gene Adams, Graham's Director of Legislative Affairs. "We don't want farmers to have to get a permit every time they plow a field, but at the same time we don't think the Turn to SESSION, page 8

farmers have a right to destroy the state's wetlands whenever they feel like it

"Thirty to 40 percent of our wetlands have been destroyed. We certainly see a need for some sort of legislation there," Adams said.

With Graham on their side, pro-wetlands' protection forces have a reasonable chance of forcing some sort of bill, probably a weaker compromise version of Mills' bill. through the Legislature. But there are also influential capitol figures who are not quite so sure about wetlands legislation

"My general philosophy is that people should be able to acquire, own, use; pass by descent distribution to heirs, or sell, property," Barron said. "At the same time you have to realize there are other people around, and that you shouldn't use that property so as to injure other people.

We have to worry about drinking water in Florida, the supply of water in Florida, but the arbitrary way in which a few people are coming up with a wetlands bill is very frightening to me as an individual who is concerned with the right of people to control their own destiny," Barron said.

Another issue certain to spark controversy is that of merit pay for Florida's public school teachers. In his proposed budget, Graham set aside about $266 million for across the-board increases in teacher pay. He also designated $17 million to fund the Florida Meritorious Instructional Incentive Program—that is, ment pay

The program would, in theory, provide extra money for especially qualified teachers. The House embraced that idea last session, and the Senate somewhat reluctantly went along. Now that there is $1? million in actual funding on the line, however, legislators are beginning to take a second look at the idea. Particularly in question is just how the state should determine which teachers are eligible for merit

Health care cost legislation this year will most likely center around containing hospital costs. The Legislature already has two basis approaches to choose from. The Mcknight report, a massive study prepared by a legislatively created task force, essentially endorses encouraging marketplace competition among hospitals to keen costs down

The legislators' second choice comes from Insurance Commissioner Bill Gunter Gunter's proposal mirrors the Mcknight study in many ways, but calls for placing a cap on hospital profits. Critics of Gunter's proposal cite its failure to address the problem of health care for the

Mcknight's package has been endorsed by Graham, and is clearly more acceptable to the hospital industry and its supporters. Even so, there is likely to be some dispute from legislators who would like to see the state play a more direct role in cost containment

Graham has also endorsed a proposal to open interstate banking between Florida banks and banks in 11 Southeastern states, provided those states let Florida banks operate within their boundaries. Adams said that proposal had the support of the major bank chains, if not that of the independent banks. He did not foresee any great difficulty getting it through the Legislature

With all those issues to deal with, and with almost 2,000 bills already prefiled for consideration, can the Legislature really finish in its allotted two months? House Speaker Lee Moffitt, D Tampa, has said he will push hard to get through on time, and even the sometimes-cynical Dempsey Barron said the 1984 Legislature has a good shot at it. And all legislators, whether they admit it or not, know that an extended session means more money and more fuel on the Amendment One fire. Clearly, everyone involved would like to finish up on schedule.

"That's what we're hoping," Adams said. "We feel it's time we showed we can be a responsible government, and get the job done "

Flambeau alumnus Michael McClelland is non capital correspondent for the Florida Freedom Newspaper chain.

If you're a senior and have the promise of a $10,000 career-oriented job, do you think it's difficult to get the American Express Card?

Guess again.

It's rather easy.

In fact, all you need is a $10,000 job. That's it. No strings. No gimmicks. And this offer is even good for 12 months after you graduate.

Because American Express wants to show that we not only believe in your future, but we also believe in you now.

But why do you need the American Express Card now?

First of all, it's a good way to help you to establish your credit history. And you know how important that is.

Of course, you can also use the Card for vacation trips, as well as for restaurants and shopping. And because the Card is recognized and welcomed worldwide, so are you.

Tribal wars on the dance floor at Smitty's

BY D.K. ROBERTS

Rock and roll Bacchanale—the beer flowed, the neon Miller light shone, the lush clove cigarette smoke curled around dancers' feet and the Purple Heads pumped it up. It was a hot old party out at Smitts's the alternative Springtime Tallahassee

Smitty's is a club of the Cool There is this lit-up Lowenbrau chandelier and FSU and FAMU handkerchiefs tacked up and a stern fatherly admonition about two I D 'S required and a sign saying "No Pot Smoking". There are defiantly untrendy old tables and chairs and a Rauschenberg painting hanging on the back wall. The Rauschenberg has a crushed beer can relic. It is very at home here.

The Purple Heads have been practicing for a month in the fertile depths of the famous OK Club. And they are ready to as on — switched on Saturdas nite. Their sets would make your ultimate dream dance tape. Stones stuff, Fleshtones, George Jones, Iggy, Elvis (Costello), Slut Boys Greatest Hits Their sound system is basic — tower-of-power speakers vawning like black holes. And it is big time LOUD, just the way you like it, just to where the music hurts so good.

Headline: Bill McCluskes brings back the guitar solo and (goddam!) makes it interesting. None of this tired smug onanistic Van Halen crap, he plays like hurricane whirling balls of fire (goodness gracious!) He roars through 'Screaming Skull' not looking at the dancing crowd sliding and bopping. That song is like boiling mercury. The dancers alap and scream as the song ends. He looks up at them,

UPTOWN SATURDAY NIGHT

offers some radical music criticism. "That sucked " But

New drummer Mick Buchanan shakes the floorboards with an angry throb, splinters flying. He bangs in some menace to the opening of "Pump li Up." Meanwhile, Ben Wilcox takes an elegant drag on his cig, looks around the room nonchalantly, then at the perfect second crashes into that steel cascade of a keyboard part and the song flares up. If funk brother Elvis the C. could have seen it, he would have wet his glasses all up for violent yoy.

By the second set, the moon has set and the tribes are out. In the corner by the beer light, the Tallypunks smoke and adjust the handcuffs hanging from their belts. Their t-shirts are carefully from Along the wall by the door, lean the flannel-shirted and baseball-capped. In between cluster the kent's intelligentsia, the regular folks, watching the two younger groups uneasily, amusedly, enviously. Smitty's becomes territorial. The interface space of Kent's intelligentsia is a DMZ but the dance floor is the zone for Slam Wars.

It's sort of West Side Story menace, a gang ballet. The Purple Heads are up front, the slammers in an ever-widening space, everyone else pressed against the walls and tables. The monitor gets knocked down. The Purple Heads blast to a stop, the keyboards screaming a single note. There's some snarling from the Tallypunks, some howling from the flannel shirts, a push here and there. When the music revs back up, the floor is full of failing adolescent legs and swinging arms. The in betweens are too scared to dance.

The flannel shirts retreat. The Tallypunks settle down after several of them are pixed apart. The dance floor becomes safe for democracy once more. And a good thing, too — the music is getting hotter by the millisecond.

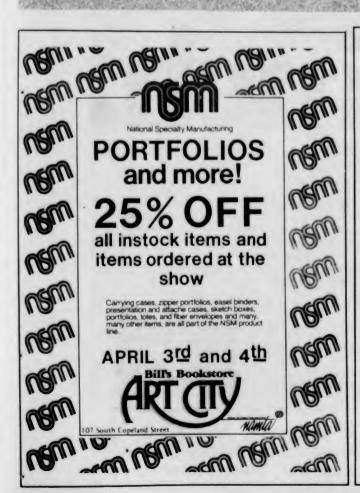

You can see why the Big Youth want to smash down that second set kirks. The Slut stomp is back in full crazy force. Those little Tallypunks with their killearn discontent are pale shadows. The Purple Heads are the real thing nasts, funky and hard—the pinnacle of the Southern garage band.

Three chords and a cloud of dust. The Purple Heads bring out the lust in "Lust for Life" that so sizzling Iggs Pop anthem with a bite like a rabid dog in the dark of the moon.

Three chords that shook the world "Reverend Bookin" has got to be the meanest sone ever to come out of the libble banged New South. I ven if you've forgotten what the sone is about, the Keyboard part is enough to seduce you into dancing till you get dizzy sweats. If the Man of God hinself could see what effect his name taken in vain has on the Young People of Today, he'd never again suspect that rock and roll is the work of the Devil—he'd know. (Hallelujah!)

Music in the Big T is looking up (praise the Lord). You may yet hear from the Purple Heads again (if you're lucky). Let's be blunt, you're a fool if you miss them next time.

After all, who - Mohawk or CAT cap - can resist a real dance P-A R T-Y (*!)

TUESDAY

Drugnet (1954) — Jack Webb's scary, brutal vision of the police world, in its greatest incarnation. Webb, of course, is Sgt. Friday (immortalized in the Coasters' song Seurchin'). Ben Alexander is his sidekick, Frank Smith. They're trying to solve a grisly murder in the streets of L.A. How can you miss this one? Domm da-domm-domm-DOMMMMMM. (WTBS, cable 2, 1.05 p.m.)

Murder on the Orient Express (1974) — A rare good movie from director Sidnes Lumet (whose latest, Book of Daniel, is godawful). Naturally, it's a piece of fluff, adapted from Agatha Christie's classic, with an All-Star Cast (Albert Finney, Lauren Bacall, John Giefgud, Tony P. P. Perkins, Richard Widmark, and Ingrid Bergman, who picked up the Bett Supporting Actress Oscar that year for this role). Mindless fun (WTBS, cable 2, 12:05 a.m.) WEDNESDAY

Sleep, My Lore (1948) — Uh, oh! Somebody (Don Ameche) is trying to knock his wife (Claudette Colbert) off in this screwy melodrama directed by Douglas Sirk. The addition of breezily insubstantial Bob Cummings and brooding Raymond Burr, years before their TV popularits, makes it a must-watch for the disillusioned, rambunctious, and merely dolorous. Better than being bored, anyhow (CBN, noon)

SATURDAY

The Devil's Eve. (1960) — Second-rate Ingmar Bergman (the first of many), the Devil sends a gofer (Jarl Kulle) to Earth to deflower a virgin (Bibi Andersson), daughter of a priest. Just like a boring episode of The Outer Limits, only with sub-titles. (Nickelodeon, cable 22, 8 p.m. and midnight).

The Blue Dubba (1946) — A film noir classic, written in an alcoholic haze by Raymond Chandler. A returning vet (Alan Ladd) finds things aren't too hot in a once-secure world. Another coup of inspired casting (Ladd, Veronica Lake, William Bendis, Howard Da Silva, and Hugh Beaumont). Lots of great period atmosphere. Any movie with William Bendis is worth watching automatically, anyway. (WCTV, cable 9, 11:30 p.m.)

The Big Circus (1959) — Must be "The" night on IV, hmm? Loveable junk about a financially troubled circus and the folks who try to save it. Another fun cast (Victor Mature, Vincent Orice, Steve Allen, Red Buttons and Peter Lorre in his last substantial role) — Noisy and colorful (WMBR, cable 13.12-70a.m.).

Marvin Gaye gunned down by his father

LNITED PRESSURE EN ATIONAL

LOS ANGELES — Singer Marvin Gaye was shot to death Sunday by his father, Marvin Gaye Sr., who was taken into custody, police said.

Gaye, 44, was pronounced dead shortly after 1 p.m. at California Hospital, police Lt. Bob Martin said.

A hospital spokesman said Gave was brought to the emergency room by Fire Department paramedics at 3:52 pm EDT, suffering a gunshot wound to the chest. He was pronounced dead at 4:01 EDT after a failed attempt to revive him, she said.

"We understand his sister accompanied him," said hospital spokesman Michelle Barker

"At approximately 12:30 this afternoon, Gaye became involved in a dispute with his father that led to a physical altercation," Martin said,

During the fight at the elder Gaye's residence in the Wilshire district, the singer's father armed himself with a handgun and shot his son "an undetermined number of times." Martin said

Martin said several people were present at the time of the shooting and that they were being interviewed at the Wilshire Division police station

The entertainer, who would have been 45 years old today, was one of the most popular singles artists for the Tamla-Motown organization during the 1960s and in 1971 electrified the music world with the release of his What's GoingOn, album

The Grapevine "The 1968 song was featured in the popular current movie, The Big Chill

Born April 2, 1939, he was raised in his native Washington, D.C. He released monster hits for Motown such as "Let's Get It On." His most recent hit was "Sexual Healing."

The 1971 What's Going On album was considered probably the first "concept" album by a black artist in the industry. The album revealed a poignant and passionate concern with urban decay, ecological crises and spiritual imposperishment.

Probably his most popular album was Let's Get It On, released in 1971. It eschewed usesal commentary in favor of straightforward comantic material.

The title cut became a smash hit single, and other hit singles from the album included "Come Get to This" and "Distant Lover."

The tragic shooting cut short one of the most successful singing careers of the last 30 years

Gay's career spanned more than a quarter of a century, beginning in the late 1950's with a group based in his home town of Washington, D.C.

Later, Gaye moved on to join the popular Moonglows, who were signed to Berry Gordy's fledgling Motown Records in 1961

Gaye married Gordy's sister, Anna, and worked as a session drummer, playing on all the early hits by Smokey Robinson and the Miracles

FSU men's tennis team keeps on winning

DAVE PICARIELLO

The Florida State men's tennis team kept their winning streak alive by defeating Flagler College, 6-3.

The 'Noles are 25.5 for the season.

In singles play, Geoff Roper of FSU, took only two sets, 7-6, 6-2, to beat Flagler's Colin Crothers. Roper worked every serve and return hard and fast to defeat Crothers.

"At first I was real tight. It was real close and went to the tie breaker in the first set," Roper, a junior from Palm Beach Junior College, said. "I kept on trying not to make any mistakes and look for openings. Then he (Crothers) started making a few mistakes and I capitalized on them."

Roper said he was pumped up for the second set and got on a roll, which allowed him to move in on more openings, and go to the net more often. Roper was able to apply more pressure, forcing Crothers to miss some good shots and make some errors.

Also in singles play, FSU's Marco Abilhoa defeated Peter Ryan, 6-4, 6-1, Joev Rive (FSU) defeated Berry Curley (F), 6-4, 7-6, and Scott Blessing defeated Glenn Gagnon (F), 6-1, 6-1.

The 'Noles number one doubles team of Rive Blessing fought a tough match against Flagler's team of Curley Valor! With FSU falling behind numerous times, the match could have gone either way, but the 'Noles' rallied to beat them, 6-4, 6-4

Both sets began with a barrage of fast exchanges. Rive scored again and again making excellent use of his powerful backband return. Blessing complemented his partner's style by slowing up the ball, moving it around from one side of the court to the other, and then hitting it hard up the middle.

"Joey and Scott put some things together and played as a real unit today," Rich McKee, head coach of the 'Noles, said. "I want to thank our sports psychologist Dr. Kirk for

Roadtrip proves a disappointment for FSU

PROMISEASE REPORTS

Florida State's current roadtrip proved to be very annoying for the Seminoles, as the first two games against Mercer were rained out. While the Seminoles lost the next pair of games against Clemson, both by large margins, on Thursday, FSU lost 13-0, and then Friday they lost again, 13-3

Things got better for the Seminoles Saturday and Sunday, however. On Saturday, the Seminoles beat Georgia State, 8-6. Sunday they came back and bombed

GSU. 26-11

Despite the disappointing roadtrip for the Seminoles, there was one bright spot. Freshman Luis Alicea broke the school consecutive game hitting streak (25 games) against Clemson Friday. The Puerto Rico native has since collected hits in the last two games, for a total hitting streak of 27 games. The collegiate record is 42 games.

FSU's record now stands at 31-15

The Seminoles will be at home Tuesday and Wednesday nights against arch-rival Florida

Look out L.A.: Here come the Braves

BY JOHN HOLECEK

Now that you know who will win the National League East Division and you have gone out and your life's fortune on the line, you are waiting with bated breath for the National League West final standings Well, wait no

Atlanta Braves - Sure they don't have one of the better starting pitching staffs in the league, but from top to bottom, the Braves have the best starting eight in the majors, har none. Top that off with a strong bullpen and the Braves should be able to overcome the lack of a great starting staff. If third baseman Bob Horner (303, 20 HR's, 68 RBI's) can remain healthy for an entire season, look for two-time MVP Dale Murphy (302, 36 HR's, 121 RBI's) to have another outstanding season. Braves' fans must hope, however, that manager Joe Torre doesn't burn out Steve Bedrosian's arm. If Bedrosian's arm stays healthy, the Braves will be time has finally come. The Padres are finally in the position to challenge for the NL West crown. The Padres added Goose Gossage to what was already a strong pitching. staff. Gossage (13.5, 2.27 ERA, 22 saves) has been the premiere reliever in baseball for the past five years. Add to a strong pitching staff, a more than adequate offense, and the Padres and the Braves should battle it out. Former Florida State star Terry Kennedy, who hit 284 with 98 RBI's last season, is the Padres best offensive threat.

Los Angeles Dodgers - The Dodgers seem to be just about everybody's consensus pick to win the West again. But why? Once you get past the starting pitching-Fernando Valenzuela (15-10), Jerry Reuss (12-11), Bob Welch (15-12) and Alejandro Pena (12-9)-the Dodgers aren't that awe inspiring. In fact, once you get past Pedro Guerrero (.298, 32 Hr's, 103 RBI's), the Dodgers offense is just mediocre. However, the Dodgers do have a rich winning tradition, so they can never be counted out.

Terry Kennedy, a former FSU star, will play an important part in the Padres upcoming season.

TOWN CRYER

Cleveland The bright spots returning for the Giants are outfielder Jack Clark, who, when he puts his mind to it, can be one of baseball's best, and pitchers Gary Lavelle (20 saves) and Greg Minton(22 saves).

Cincinnati Reds - Talk about an inoffensive team, the Reds were the only team in the big leagues to hit under 240 as a team. To top it off, nobody on the team hit over .280. It's a wonder the team was able to win the 74 games that it did. Their pitching was not much better. Starters Joe Price (10-6) and Mario Soto (17-13) were the Reds staff. No other pitcher on the team had a winning record. Just think what Soto could do on a real team. Last year he struck out 242 in 273.2 innings. The Reds have some young talent in outfielders Gary Redus and Eddie Milner, and they acquired outfielder Dave Parker, formerly of the Pittsburgh Pirates, but it looks like another long summer for the fans of Cincinnati

Houston Astros-The Astros were the surprise team of 1983, by going 85. 68 over their last 153 games Unfortunately, the Astros started the year off 0-7. The big question has to be,"How did the Astros do it?" They do have some strong pitching, along with a good defense, but offensively they aren't fence busters Shortstop Dickie Thon ( 286, 20 HR's, 79 RBI's) had the year of his life. Ray Knight, who hit 304 with RB1's, exceptionally well Astros do have talent, but it won't be enough to push them over the top. San Francisco Glants-Perhaps the only good thing that can be said about the Giants is that they won't finish in the cellar That dubious honor should belong to the Cincinnati The Giants, who Reds were busy in the off season, ensured their fifth place finish by unloading sore armed pitcher Fred Breining to Montreal for solid first baseman Al Oliver, who has a career lifetime batting average over 300, and getting second baseman Manny Trillo from

South Africa won bitter victory over its neighbor

BY JOANMARIE KALTER

MAPUIO, Mozambique — To visit the village of Changanine, 250 miles north of this capital city, requires a military excert. Soldiers with bazeokas and assault rifles guard the dusts dirt road, their teen age faces peering from the bush.

The escort winds past one village where only empty, charred buildings remain. At another, villagers dig trenches to protect themselves and show the food they live on —cooked leaves "Just wait 'til you see Changanine," says a soldier "There the people suffer."

This is the setting of an "undeclared war," a war that has been at once military and economic. The Mozambique National Resistance (MNR) — largely trained, equipped and financed by white-ruled South Africa. — now operates in almost all of Mozambique, burning villages, attacking rail lines, bombing the oil pipeline and mining roads.

There are hopes that a non-aggression pact with South Africa may bring the war to an end

Since independence in 1975, Morambique's black-ruled socialist government has been on the front lines in opposing aparthesd, and in struggling toward economic independence from South Africa. Allies and anti-apartheid activisits may be dismayed by the new agreement, but Morambique president Samora Michel had no choice.

As a Mozambican delegate to the talks with South Africa put it, "If we continued our past policies, there would soon be nothing more to destroy in Mozambique."

The MNR, an estimated 10,000 strong, is drawn from the remnants of Portugese colonial forces as well as the ranks of hungry, disgruntled peasants. It has no idealogical stance beyond vague anti-communism, and it never holds an area more than a few days.

Its purpose seems simply to destroy what little infrastructure exists in Mozambique, yet its actions affect all of southern Africa. Mozambican railways and ports provide the only access to the sea for five of the country's black-ruled landlocked neighbors—the only access, that is, except through South Africa.

Mozambique estimates its "war of independence" has cost $3.8 billion. But it is in places like Changanine where the real human price has been paid. That village is home to women and children displaced by the fighting. They have received no food in three months, so they scavenge for the leaves and little fruit not destroyed by three straight years of drought.

They are covered with scabies. Some have cholera. The children stand listless, with bloated bellies and copper hair, signs of severe malnutrition. Some tremble with fever. An old woman collapses in the 98-degree heat. A young woman suckles here baby at a dry, withered breast. She has been here five months, she says, ever since her husband went looking for food. Did he join the MNR? Was he killed by them? She cannot say

An official of this village of 4,000 has carefully tallied the death toll: in three months, 328. Dr. John McMillin of World Vision, a Christian relief organization, says he has never seen such concentrated suffering anywhere — not in Ethiopia, not in Chad.

The Mozambican government will not call the MNR a resistance movement — simply "banditos." Yei its campaign of terror is all too real. Rumors of severed ears, lips, arms and breasts have been too consistently reported in too many

Why the crisis in Poland?

Poland gave us Kosciusko.

Will Reagan

be a hero of

BY DEBORAH HARTLEY

Ronald Reagan may be a hero of the Revolution yet at least Poland's premier, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzalski, has said Reagan deserves a medal for integraing Poland with the other Warsaw Pact nations.

According to Longin Pastusiak, a University of Warsaw sociology professor, the economic sanctions imposed against Poland by the Reagan administration have forced Poland to turn to the Soviet Union for aid, and slowed Poland's economic recovery

But Pastusiak, who spoke Monday at Florida State University, was concerned more with how the problems in Poland today came about, rather than offering possible solutions. He said, sardonically, that the Polish crisis could be "solved" either by the "realistic" way—"if Jesus Christ came down from heaven with all the saints and angels, and they all worked hard to solve the problem," or the "miraculous" way—"if the Poles themselves work hard to solve the economic crisis."

And Pastusiak told an audience of FSU political science students that the crash in the Polish economy—from 1979 to '82—in 1981, Poland's gross national product declined by 12.8 percent—was one cause of the current crisis in Poland

To understand unrest in Poland today. Pastusiak said, Americans have to remember what Poland was like in the early 1970s—the halcyon days of Premier Edward Gierek, when Poland's economy was growing by more than 10 percent a year From 1971 to '74, Poland had the fastest-growing economy in the world. In those days, Pastusiak, said the boast in Poland was, "We are building the second Poland Within a decade, we will double our GNP."

Gierek undertook to industrialize Poland—and in a big hurry. Pastusiak said the Polish evening news during the 1970s almost always features Gierek or some other official with a pair of scissors, cutting the ribbon on a new factory.

At the same time, the Gierek regime began to offer Police vastly increased social services—every family was promised a

attorney argues for convict's life

LOTTED PRINCIPLE ROATIONAL

Convicted killer Elwood C. Barclay should not be put to death because a jury determined he was not a leader of a plan to kill a white man to start a race war, Barclay's lawyer argued Monday

Attorney Talbot "Sandy" D'Alemberte told the Florida Supreme Court that the trial judge improperly overruled a jury recommendation of life in prison in sentencing Barclay to die in the electric chair.

Barclay, now 33, was convicted for his role in the 1974 murder of hitchhiker Stephen Anthony Orlando in Jacksonville. Orlando was white, while Barclay and three co-defendants are black

Prosecutors said the four men sent tape recordings to news media claiming credit for Orlando's murder and declaring war against "white devils "

Barclay had been scheduled to die in the electric chair Jan. 24, but the state Supreme Court blocked the execution. eight days earlier. Monday's arguments marked Barclay's third appeal to the justices

D'Alemberte said the entire crime was conceived and carried out under the leadership of Jacob John Dugan Jr. as a way to scare whites. Dugan, who fired a fatal blow into Orlando's head, also received the death penalty, while two other men were convicted of second-degree murder.

"The evidence is consistent with the position that Dugan sought to scare some people, and this talk of racial war was a way to scare people," D'Alemberte told the seven blackrobed justices.

He noted that during the murder Orlando was stabbed with a small pocket knife and then shot with a 22-caliber pistol, unlikely weapons to start a war

D'Alemberte said the trial judge violated a Supreme Court standard when he overruled a jury recommendation of life in prison without first determining that no reasonable person could conclude the death sentence wasn't warranted.

D'Alamberte, who will become law school dean at Florida State University July 1, conceded Barclay stabbed Orlando during the murder, but agreed with Justice Joseph Boyd's assertion that Barclay was under Dugan's influence.

mmer house. Free medical treatment was offered to all Poles, and they could take advantage of early retirement at age 55

Women could take six months maternity leave with full pay-and continue to collect partial pay for the next three vears

It all seemed too good to be true, and it was. What

Gierek wasn't telling the Polish people was that Poland was financing its rapid industrialization and expanded social services by borrowing heavily from foreign banks-490 of them to be exact, 63 of them U.S. banks.

According to Pastusiak, the Gierek model for Poland's economy was simple-too simple to be

"First you made new investments in factories built on highly sophisticated technology from Japan, Germany, the United States," said Pastusiak "Then you exported the products from those factories and used the money to repay foreign debts."

Longin Pastusiak

The Gierek equation didn't work for a variety of reasons For one thing, Poland-which is rich in coal, but low on electrical power plants-simply didn't have enough energy to operate all the new facilities the factory-happy Gierek regime built. Pastusiak said Poles got used to listening for government reports on the highly enforced energy rationing system the way Americans listen to weather reports in the morning

To add to Poland's problems, Western economies went into revession during the early and mid-'70s. The fat market Gierek visualized for Polish exports suddenly shrank - and many Polish products just weren't up to snuf in the highly competitive Western market

By 1978, faced with $8 billion worth of loan payments plus interest, mostly owed to Western investors, Poland announced for the first time that it couldn't meet the debt

As factories closed down or operated at half-capacity, Poland tried desperately to increase exports to get the hard currency it needed to buy raw materials and vital manufacturing components from the West And Poles started to feel the pinch of shortages at home.

According to Pastusiak, Poland erupted in 1980-the "Polish August" particularly because Poles weren't prepared for the drastic decline in the economy and the standard of living in Poland

Pastusiak compared the mood in Poland then to the mood of America during the Vietnam war or the Watergate years. Poland's massive foreign debt had been treated as a "state secret," Pastusiak said, and Gierek had been surrounded by "yes" men.

Although he doesn't agree with Solidarity, Pastusiak does credit the union with "identifying the issues in the beginning."

Chief among those issues was that Poles hadn't been told the truth by their government. In one decade Poland had gone from enjoying unprecedented economic growth to a nation with a crippled economy. From 1979 to '82, Poland's GNP declined by 25 percent

With the evidence of economic collapse all around them in the late 1970s and early 1980s, Poles reacted with anger

The South African story

If you're not familiar with the way the Republic of South Africa operates, you might have been suprised by the announcement last week that the apartheid regime was increasing its military budget by 21.4 percent. Just the week before, South Africa had signed a non-aggression pact with neighboring Mozambique, also in recent weeks, Pretoria agreed to remove its tropps from southern Angola in return for Angola's promise to stop helping nationalist rebels in Namibia, which South Africa illegally controls.

With all these peace initiatives, you might wonder, why the need for a military spending hike?

The answer? The accords with Mozambique and Angola are not peace treaties in any meaningful sense. They are admissions by Mozambique and Angola that they haven't the strength to continue aid to the forces trying to put an end to the control the racist Pretoria government exercises over southern Africa. Those two governments can no longer stand the air raids, the trade embargoes, or the famines they have suffered since they began helping anti-South African rebels. They've been bullied into submission; the increase in South Africa's military budget is designed to make sure they stay in line.

But then, bully tactics are nothing new to the South African government, and are not restricted to its foreign affairs. At home, South Africa is a virtual police state, wherein security forces are free to use the most repressive means imaginable to enforce a degree of control over the populace unthinkable to most Americans.

South Africa's Terrorism Act, for example, allows police to take into custody persons suspected of being "terrorists" or withholding information, and to hold them for an indefinite period of time without allowing the suspect access to family, friends or lawyers

Blacks need passports because, under South African law, they are not considered citizens — even though they make up 70 percent of the population. The Nationalist Party, which has ruled South Africa since 1948, has recently made essentially meaningless political concessions to the Indians and persons of mixed-race who comprise another12 percent of the population, but blacks are not allowed even that much. The government has instead established a number of bantustans — so-called "homelands" — to which it eviles blacks. These bantustans are some of the most desolate spots in southern Africa — places where it is impossible to earn a living from farming, places which have no real industrial bases of their own. Black males living in the bantustans, therefore, are forced to leave their homes and families behind and move to ghettoes adjacent to cities like Cape Lown and Johannesburg to work for slave wages in mines and factories.

Needless to say, blacks are fighting South Africa's apartheid regime. At first they peacefully asked the regime to relax the oppressive laws. They received their answer in 1960 at Sharpeville, where 69 Africans died when police fired on peaceful demonstration against the pass laws. Dissenters were driven underground, into organizations like the African National Congress, which have been conducting raids against military targets in South Africa — police garrisons, power plants and the like — from bases in neighboring counties like Mozambique. There are, of course Marxist elements within the resistance, but that's to be expected when the Western democracies — like the United States — sit on their hands and refuse to help in any meaningful way.

Of course, the Reagan administration cares less about totalitarianism than it does communism, and will happily endorse even the most brutal police state as long as the goons in charge call themselves "anti-communist."

But regimes like South Africa's don't deserve American support. If the administration doesn't understand why, it's up to the rest of us to take matters in our own hands. A national coalition began a two week project to tell the story about South Africa a week ago. Locally, the project began Monday and will continue today and Wednesday under the auspices of the Center for Participant Education. Attend the programs; learn what you can do.

Frat violence

Editor

At the risk of appearing somewhat less than supportive of Florida State University's fraternity system, the latest escapades of six IFC officials seem worthy of additional scrutiny. As if the indiscriminate fighting, assorted burglaries and willful and wanton burning of university property by various fraternity members were not enough, the recent highway shooting incident near Albany, Gatakes the proverbul cake.

The explanations offered by the individuals involved seem, at the very best, highly "unusual", if not downright untenable. That a supposedly responsible representative of FSU would resort to gunplay in order to "get the attention" of another party certainly seems inconsistent with acceptable modes of behavior. Honking the horn or flashing one's headlights appear to be more conventional methods of gaining another motorist's attenion.

The laxity of investigation of the shooting incident, along with the lenient punishment meted out to the arsonists burglars, seems to suggest that a double standard for Greeks versus non-Greeks is in effect at Florida State University. Perhaps the time is here to examine the merits of the Greek system, drawing the line on further deviant behavior by fraternity members and ending this double standard.

Sexist ads

Editor

As an avid reader of the Flambeau, I am quite familiar with the editorial board's strong stance against sexism and exploitation of women in the media. This attitude ought to be reflected in your choice of advertisements. However, this does not seem to be the case. I am specifically referring to an ad for Torado Tequila that appeared in the Friday (March 23) Flambeau. The ad (which can also be purchased in poster form) portrays a young woman in the foreground standing on a barroom table with her legs spread suggestively. One need not have a magnifying glass to notice a bottle of said Tequila in the background area between her legs perched ubiquitously upward. The men surrounding her are certainly not looking at the Tequila, nor the camera for that matter. Less subtly, the slogan "Mexico's Best Shot" is blazened across the bottom of the photo.

I find it rather hypocritical that a newspaper which claims to support the public condemnation of sexploitation also supports such exploitative advertising. Moreover, is the inclusion of such an offensive, demeaning advertisement really "serving Tallahassee," that is, serving (?) the general community and not just a select group thereof? If the Flambeau editorial board would take a self-conscious look at their own stated opinions and isleads as well as their choice of advertisements, I'm certain the inconsistency would become apparent perhaps you should question whether the economic gains made by running such an ad are worth the loss of journalistic credibility. The Flambeau could set a positive example in this community by refusing to participate in this type of "media rape."

Editor's note: The Flambeau's editorial board sets the paper's editorial policy, but has no control over advertising policy. That's the domain of the advertising department. Complaints about ads should be directed to the advertising manager or the business manager. Another tactic, if you're concerned about particular ads, would be to write directly to the advertising.

Candidates do last-minute campaigning

NEW YORK - Walter Mondale led Gary Hart and Jesse Jackson in two statewide polls Monday as the Democratic candidates stumped New York on the eye of the biggest primary so far in the 1984 presidential race.

With 252 delegates at stake, New York City voters dominate the primary turnout. City elections board officials predict 50 percent of the 1.8 million registered Democrats will vote-up from 38 percent four years ago. Statewide, officials predict 30 to 35 percent of the Democrats will vote

Mondale wanted a big win in New York Tuesday and another next week in Pennsylvania to show he is the clear favorite of the his industrial northern states with their heavy Democratic vote. He told the Buffalo Evening News on the eye of the primary a loss in New York would mean his drive for the nomination is in trouble, but a victory would make him the candidate to catch

MIAMI-Acting on a tip from Texan intelligence agents, the U.S. Coast Guard seized $10 million worth of cocaine from a sailboat in the Windward Passage, the largest maritime drug seizure in history, officials said Monday

About 2,200 pounds of cocaine with a wholesale value of $100 million was seized late Sunday from the 33-foot sailboat Shinook, said Coast Guart Petty Officer Mike Kelley The contraband is worth an estimated $200 million on the street, he said

TALLAHASSEE-The Florida Supreme Court refused Monday to block the Thursday execution of Arthur Frederick Goode, a tapist and murderer of young boys who said last month that he would kill again if freed from

Goode's attorney, Sanford Bohrer of Miami, had argued in briefs filed with the court Friday that Goode was insane and could not be executed by the state

The court rejected that argument in a 7-0 decision, saying a three-member psychiatric panel appointed by Gov. Bob Graham examined Goode in February and found that he understood the death penalty and why it had been imposed places to be dismissed

When Mozambique was a Portugese colony, its economy depended largely on South Africa. More than 100,000 Mozambicans worked in South African mines. This capital city flourished as a South African tourist resort, and Mozambique's harbors on the Indian Ocean gave South African industry cheap and easy access to the world.

Today, South Africa has cut Mozambican mine employment by two-thirds, and the unemployed swell the decrepit shantytowns that stretch for miles around Maputo. Tourism has ceased to exist, and South Africa has built its own harbor on the Indian Ocean.

The underdeveloped Mozambican economy also has been shaken by the flight of skilled Portugese, the worst drought in its history, and mismanagement. Now, the government says the MNR has destroyed half the shops in rural areas and made many roads impassable.

With little to buy in the shops, peasants have no reason to produce beyond their own needs. With less surplus, exports fall. With falling exports, there is little foreign currency for development.

This capital city looks at first like an African paradise, with its hills that sweep up gently from the bay, its broad streets, its parks aglow with flowering acacia trees.

But a closer look reveals decay. On block after block, cafes, nightclubs, stores and restaurants have closed. Lines from before dawn at food shops. The mere rumor of gas at a service station sparks lines of cars whose drivers wait all day.

Those who do buy gas face real danger after dark because Mozambicans do not use their headlights. With no foreign exchange for spare parts, a burned-out headlight could never be replaced.

In the Polana Hotel, once the lap of colonial luxury here, a huge relief map of Africa decorates the lobby — but with the bottom, South Africa, lopped off. In the dining room, however, patrons eat food imported from South Africa — and must pay in foreign currency.

Juca Vicente Ngobene lives on a street named for Eduardo Mondlane, a hero assassinated during the war for independence. The corridors of his building reek of urine, the halls are smeared with filth. In the stairwell, children play in puddles of fetid rainwater.

The young man who answers the door appears hollow, barely able to stand. At 24, Juca Vicente has tuberculosis. Like many Mozambicans, he is pleased about the pact. "It is good," he sass. "In South Africa, there is medicine."

The Mozambican government sees the new agreement as a first step in a trade, tourism and energy exchange. It will return Mozambique to a service economy in support of South Africa, and require the expulsion of anti-apartheid African National Congress members sheltered in Mozambique.

To critics of this dramatic aboutface, the Mozambican delegate has a ready—and understandble—answer. "To the first country which calls us traitors, we will reply "You start applying sanctions against South Africa, and send us arms and fuel Then we can talk.""

Mozambicans hope this pact with South Africa will allow their country to grow stronger. For the next generation, they say, the fight against apartheid will at least be possible—and some day economic independence will be won

Merit pay application deadline is extended

Monday was the deadline for schoolteachers to apply for bonuses under the state's new merit pay plan, but Gov. Bob Graham moved to delay the deadline until April 20.

Graham placed a proposal to extend the deadline on the agenda for this week's Cabinet meeting on Thursday.

"This just shows that the plan is hastily drafted and it's going to leave itself open to these kinds of problems," said Jim Geiger, vice president of a teacher's union, FEA-United.

Graham wants to extend the deadline because the Cabinet changed the plan after teachers were mailed information stating the qualifications required to earn the merit pay boouses of up to $3,000 a year.

But later, the Cabinet changed a section governing how many absences are to be allowed for teachers who receive merit pay. The Cabinet said at first that paid leave with approval would not count against candidates, then changed the rule so that all approved absences do not count.

As of Friday, 7,323 teachers had applied for the merit pay, which is to be awarded beginning next year, out of a total of about 90,000 teachers statewide.

Although that did not reflect a strong adherence to the union call for all teachers to apply, a Pinellas County poll indicated strong support for FES - Duiled's positions.

The poll, published Saturday in the St. Petersburg

The poll, published Saturday in the St. Petersburg Times, showed that 93 percent of the 238 teachers surveyed opposed the merit pay plan passed by Graham and the Cabinet.

'Winter Dreams': Steady and alone

BY ALAN LOCKWOOD

MEGAL TO THE PLANTILATE

Cider Mill Press has published the recent poems of Herb Coursen in a solid little package; the book, Winter Denams, sits thinly packed on a desk or table top. It holds its own.

Turn directly to illustrations of marshes, foliage (by Brita Banachi) and the "Other Books by H. R. Coursen" section, then the frontispiece (birch trees, or something), the acknowledgements and Contents. And you're into one man's world.

Most of Coursen's works are concise, thin like the book, direct observations of people in the paradoxical position of holding central importance in this vast, open world

Yet his poems are not loggered with the blackness or doom so often associated with human conditions, aloneness. Night is evident throughout, stars, it is a clear night. And the poems are simply stated, well-wrought reflections on this clearness and hugeness that is all around us.

"Each day — merely getting around the truth of empliness in sky or just that I alone am empty when I would try to get across to her, just that, just get across (January Sestina)

Winter Dreums has a sequence of poems from mythology at the beginning of the book entitled "Trio from the Aeneid"; they present connections between three characters. It is a good device, going from one person to another one who comments on the first, but it is too involved for the beginning of the book, a place where the reader could use some pampering. I like the quick hitters. Coursen writes so effectively on sports, say, or love.

He makes "mythical" situations — like war — extremels real. Poems like "Bombline" and "Wild Blue Yonder" deal with his experiences as a fighter pilot in Korea. It is effectively related experiences like these that can wipe away childish fascinations with war and glory without leaving stains, or holes.

Maine is also represented effectively. Coursen lives in that state, teaches in Brunswick, and writes quiet, serene landscapes of woods, coast, fields, cutting firewood with nipped cars, birds, clammers, they are all here in Coursen's abundant, observant view.

The women of Coursen's reflections go unnamed, peripheral, strong affairs, memories. There are not many people in Winter Dreums; this characteristic of the poet's view becomes evident about half way through the book, and is reinforced in his selection of drawings for the book much of nature in pen and ink, and not a single soul.

His aloneness is only occasionally discomfitting ("9 October, 1979" is a storm poem, the "the" is isolated in a cabin, wondering "whether a fullmoon did rise above the winter's tide, or whether that, as well, had been demed."

For the most part — for the strong part — of this book, the voice stands between roots in the soil and the stars between earth and the heavens, looking. He has his memories, like the quick, clear "Christmas Cove Road":

"Back there— you can just see it through the trees was a tennis court. Notice level luf woven over with wild flowers. There, in the thirties, when the rest of the world lay deep in depression, brown eved Susan remped in her whites, sweeping the ball back to him with laughter. There, where flowers grow, she cried love to him across the net, and love.

And, in "7 April, 1981", he speaks again of his memories and the world in his mind, saying "Whatever world has captured her at last, she is here this day with me."

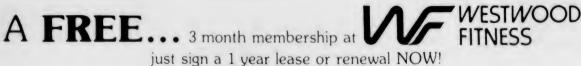

His world view is very real — a bird freezes to death and falls from a tree — and his voice does not depend on humor. There is occasional, highly conscious wit here, he opens "Learn To Kill Bainbridge AFB" with the line Turn to DREAMS, page 11

'Bad blood'plagued Gaye relations

LINITED PRINCIPLES ATRONAL

LOS ANGELES — Marvin Gaye had clashed in the past with his father, a retired preacher accused of gunning the soul singer down in a family feud, but the squabbles had never been violent, police said Monday. "There was some bad blood," Lt. Bob Martin said. "But there were no indications of physical altercations in the past. It was nothing more than what you would expect a father and son to disagree about."

Gaye, who would have turned 45 on Monday, was shot Sunday during a fight with Marvin Gaye Sr. The elder Gaye, 70, was booked for murder and held without hail pending arraignment Wednesday

He talked at length with detectives and Martin said charges would be filed based on his statements and intersiews with the suspect's wife. Alberta, 71, the only witnesses to the slaying. He declined to say what the couple told police.

The squabble between father and son, which began Saturday night and resumed Sunday, involved the mailing of an insurance letter, Martin said

"It's the kind of an argument 3-year-olds would have," he added

Gaye, who lived with his parents in their Wilshire area home, called his father to his room to discuss the matter, then ordered him to leave, Martin said. The elder Gave allegedly returned with a gun and shot his son twice in the upper torso.

The singer, whose sultry delivery of such hits as "I Heard It Through The Grapevine" and "Sexual Healing" kept him atop the record charts for 20 years, was pronounced dead at California Hospital about an hour after the shooting.

Personal problems — including a $600,000 divorce — and a shortage of good mareral all but wrecked Gave's singing career during the middle 20's, despite a No. I hit in 1977 with "Got To Give It Up."

Gave once said he tried to kill himself by ingesting more than an ounce of pure cocaine after the breakup of his second marriage—to Janie Hunter But he survived, and later told friends he "used it all, the bad stuff and the good, in the musse."

In the early 1980's, after remarrying and moving from the Tamla-Motown label to Columbia. Gaye made a spectacular comeback Last year, he won a Grammy for best male Rhythm and Blues performance with his top-rated 1982 single. "Sexual Healing." The instrumental flip side also won a Grammy.

Georgetown beats Houston, 84-75

BY FRED LIFE

SEATTLE-Georgetown's extraordinary bench eclipsed college basketball's Clash of the Titans Monday night, sending the Hoyas to a 84-75 victory over Houston for the NCAA title

In completing their magnificent run this season, reserves Reggie Williams scored 19 points and Michael Graham 14 for the Hoyas. Georgetown had to withstand the excellent second half of Houston's Alvin Franklin, who scored 21 points and kept the Cougars alive

It was their play that dictated the tempoof this championship game rather than the celebrated showdown of centers between Patrick I wing of Georgetown and Akeem Olajuwon of Houston

In winning its first national title, Georgetown became the first team from the East in 30 years to win the NCAA crown since LaSalle in 1954. In their previous

1982, the Hoyas lost in the closing seconds to North Carolina

The decision was yet another frustration for Houston, which now has been to the Final Four three straight years without winning the crown last season the Cougars were denied the title on a finalsecond dunk by North Carolina State

The focus was clearly on Olajuwon and I wing in what was billed as the most celebrated showdown of centers in the history of the NCAA title game

But with both teams swarming on defense, their productivity was limited Ewing, a 7 foot All America, finished with 10 points and just one basket in the second half, while his ?-foot Nigerian counterpart finished with 15 points. Each had nine rebounds

For No. 2 Georgetown, 34-3, David Wingate added 16 points. Houston, 32-5, received 18 points from Michael Young

Graham seeks tax reform

BY MICHAEL MCCLELLAND

Gov. Bob Graham told the Florida Legislature Tuesday that the state is doing well and has the opportunity to move into national preeminence in virtually every area of public concern

Making his sixth State of the State address before a joint session of the House of Representatives and the Senate on opening day of the 1984 session, Graham also criticized the proposed Amendment One to the Florida Constitution as harmful and unnecessary, but asked the legislators to consider reforming the state's tax structure.

He proposed "a comprehensive review of Florida's tax system, investigating its fairness, its response to cycles in the economy and its future appropriateness."

Amendment One was ruled unconstitutionally broad by the state Supreme Court last week and struck from the November ballot. The sponsors of the citizens' initiative promised to ask federal courts to reinstate it on the ballot

Graham lauded the state's accomplishments in education, transportation and law enforcement, and listed his priorities for the session.

As expected, Graham asked the legislators to support teacher pay increases, regional interstate banking, cost health care containment measures and legislation to protect Florida's wetlands. Graham also asked the legislators to support a get-tough policy toward drunk drivers and to put an additional $75 million into the criminal justice system.

"The future Florida 1 envision by the year 1995 is a state in robust economic health, able to finance the public projects and programs its citizens want, continuing to manage its assets frugally and conservatively." Graham said "We can make Florida's 150th birthday celebration a time of international recognition of the accomplishments of a state dedicated to excellence."

Graham's address received mixed reviews from the legislators, many of whom described the speech as pleasant but vague.

"It's very easy to make a good speech when you've got a billion dollars to spend, which is what we've got." Senate Dean Dempsey Barron, D-Panama City. "He did address a lot of the things we need to deal with."

Members of the Republican minority generally agreed with Graham's priorities, but were critical of his economic proposals

"It's hard to disagree with motherhood and apple pie, and I think that's what we got today," said Senaic Minority Leader Toni Jennings, R-Orlando She criticized Graham's failure to propose a tax rollback and his proposed increases in several stateassessed fees. "Governmental taxes have increased under Bob Graham $1.7 billion," Jennings said: "That's the concern of the people, and of the Republicans."

Jennings and House Minority Leader Ron Richmond, R-Holiday, called for a repeal of the controversial unitary tax and for a restriction on government growth along the lines of Amendment One Government growth restrictions, in fact, seemed to be on the minds of most of the legislators on opening day Republicans and Democrats alike said they saw a need of some sort of action by the Legislature on growth limitation.

"We need to listen to the people and do what they want," said House Appropriations Committee Chairman Herb Morgan, D-Tallahassee "Our credibility is on the line"

Barron said he would like to see some sort of statutory limit on growth set by the Legislature Tallahassee's Representative Al Lawson, a Democrat, agreed

"Government needs to tighten up its use of funds," Lawson said. "We waste an awful lot of money."

Lawson predicted the House would come up with some sort of government growth limiting legislation, but would not predict whether it would pass the full Legislature

Senate makes fatal child abuse punishable by death

UNITED PREMIENTERNATIONAL

The Senate voted unanimously to add fatal child abuse to Florida's death penalty law Tuesday but postponed action on mandatory prison terms for rape

Opening the 1984 session with two-dozen bills on its floor calendar, the Senate also stalled consideration of a bill intended to pinpoint abortion-related deaths by allowing autopsics when women die during—or shortly after—pregnancy Opponents, led by Sen Jack Gordon, D. Miami Beach, claimed the bill (SB 38) would invade the privacy of women who undergo abortion by requiring their death certificates to disclose recent pregnancies.

The Senate voted 38-0 for the bill by Sen. John Vogt, D-Cocoa Beach, adding "aggravated child abuse" to the list of homicides punishable by death. Vogt said his bill (SB 72) was prompted by a Seminole County case in which a child was tortured for a week by a man who could only be tred

Divorce courts shouldn't order payment of college expenses

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Divorce courts should not be allowed to order parents to pay the college expenses of adult children, an attorney for a wealthy North Miami physician told the Florida Supreme Court.

Norman S. Klein, an attorney representing Dr. Bertram Grapin, a millionaire internist, told the high court Monday he shouldn't be ordered to pay expenses, particularly since his daughter is legally an adult.

Such an order violates his "freedom to be a parent," Klein was quoted as saying in the St. Petersburg Times. He said a parent should have the right to say, if "you want to go to college, go out and work for it."

Grapin, who divorced his wife in 1980 after 19 years of marriage, claimed he would pay the expenses "under his terms and conditions"—not under a court order.

Most Florida appellate courts have agreed with Grapin's viewpoint, even though the state Supreme Court in 1975 ordered a father to support twin boys over 18 who were then in college.

Most courts have ruled that a father or a mother may be ordered to support a child over 18 only if the child is mentally or physically disabled.

But Beverly Grapin, his ex-wife, disagreed. She is receiving $1,200 a month in alimony and claims she needs four times that amount to keep up the household, support her family and maintain, the "high style of living" to which she had become accustomed.

The trial judge originally ordered Grapin to pay daughter Jaime's college expenses, but that was overturned by the 3rd District Court of Appeal. It's a moot point, said attorney Brian R. Hersh, because Grapin has already paid for many of her college with.

But Hersh said he wants the law cleared up. He said it was never a problem until the age of legal adulthood was lowered from 21 to 18.

Court: Army violated lesbian's civil rights

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

PORTLAND, Maine—A federal magistrate Tuesday overruled the U.S. Army's ban on homosexuals and ordered it to reinstate a woman kicked out of the service for proclaiming her lesbianism.

"I'm very happy," said Diane Matthews, 26, of South Portland, who was fired from the Army's Reserve Officers Training Corps in 1981 after coming out of the closet "because I was tired of lying."

"Decause I was treed or lying. In a 42-page opinion, U.S. Magistrate D. Brock Hornby ruled there was no evidence Matthews actually committed a homosexual act. And he said her dismissal just for proclaiming herself a lesbian amounted to a violation of her constitutional rights.

The Army, which had argued just having a proclaimed homosexual in its ranks could damage morale, had no immediate comment on whether it would appeal the

"We haven't had a chance to see a court opinion," said Army spokeswoman Gerri Taylor at the Pentagon in Washington.

"Until our people can get a chance to look at the documents, it's a little premature to say what we'll do."

The case is the first federal court decision clearly stating that a person's homosexual status alone cannot be grounds for discharge.

Got a problem?

You may not know it, but you are a target. Distillers, brewers, liquor stores and bars are all competing for your drinking dollar. You spell big bucks to the alcohol industry, and not only because college kids like to go out drinking. You may not realize it, but right now, in your student years, you're probably deciding what brand of beer or scotch or vodka or rum you'll drink for the rest of your life Advertisers know that, and they're willing to campaign aggressively to convince you their brand is best.

You're also, consciously or unconsciously, making certain decisions about how you'll use—or abuse—alcohol for the rest of your life. Unfortunately, drinking is so much a part of college life that it's easy to slip into a pattern of abuse with the hearty encouragement of your peers.

Can you imagine a frat party without booze? How many times have you and your friends decided to go out drinking because "there's nothing else to do in Tallahassee?"

But while you're busy becoming the stuff of legend for the "wild" things you did dead-drunk last night, you could be developing a serious drinking problem.

If you're driving drunk, you're already endangering yourself and other people—and you're doing it willfully, because you know you shouldn't drive when you've been drinking. Unless you've been living in a cave, you should know by now that if you don't plan to stay sober, you ought to arrange a ride with a friend who does, or call a cab.

But even if you're scrupulous about not driving drunk, you still may find alcohol is starting to affect your life in unpleasant ways.

You may be missing classes or blowing tests because you have a hangover. You may vow to limit yourself to two or three beers at a party, and wind up losing count after five or six. Far from enjoying the notoriety, you may be embarrassed when friends kid you about things you did drunk last night you would never have done sober.

You may not remember what you did last night, or how you got home—particularly dangerous if you're a woman. You may be drinking alone when you can't find anyone to drink with you. You may wake up the morning after feeling so awful you don't feel better until you start drinking again. The old "hair of the dog" remedy may temporarily relieve a hangover, but it also sets up a vicious cycle.

If any of this sounds familiar, your drinking could be getting out of control. This week is Alcohol Awareness Week at Florida State University, and it wouldn't be a bad time to look at your drinking habits.

BACCHUS, or Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students, is a student group that promotes responsible drinking. Throughout the week, BACCHUS will be sponsoring events designed to educate FSU students about alcohol use and abuse.

Students often rationalize excess drinking by insisting getting drunk regularly is part of the "fun" of going to college. Many also say they won't drink as much when they get out of college and go to work.

But by that time, it might not be so easy to change your ways.

Capitalist tool

Editor

Fred Lenhoff of the Flambeau would make a good magician. In his recent article on a Socialist Workers Party campaign meeting he has shown great talent for making the unreal real and causing reality to disappear from view.

In a manner typical of most "objective" capitalist media journalists, Lenhoff has managed to write a three-column article on a political meeting without taying anything political.

Flambeau readers should be insulted by Lenhoff's amateursh attempt to substitute a mishmash of vagueness, distortion and irrelevant atmospherics for coverage of an important campus event

The U.S. economic system is in a deep state of crisis. Recessions and depressions occur ever more frequently. Each economic slump is longer, deeper and more devastating than the one before

Today, as usual, it is the workers, small farmers and unemployed which have been made to bear the burden of the crisis. The employers and their government are waging a war on our rights and living standards. While the monopolists on Wall Street are reaping record profits, the entire working class has been made to suffer.

The recent attacks on PATCO, the United Food and Commercial Workers, the Greyhound ATU workers, the Arizona copper strikers, the gutting of Affirmative Action and the minimum wage freeze illustrate how these blows hvae come down on all workers, skilled and unskilled, organized and unorganized, with Black, Latino and women workers suffering the most.

The Simpson Mazolli bill, the attempts to broaden the use of the death penalty and the invocation of the Taft Hartley Act by the Carter Mondale administration against the coal miners are examples of how the government chips away at our democratic rights in service to the employers.

This employer government offensive against workers and farmers at home is coupled with a drive toward war against workers and farmers abroad. The new Vietnam that has already begun in Central America and the Caribbean is caused by the U.S. ruling class's desite to open new markets and defend and more thoroughly exploit the old ones

The Socialist Workers campaign is the only one which explains that these attacks against workers and farmers at home and abroad are the result of the obsolescence and decay of the capitalist system itself. The war drive and the attacks on our democratic rights and living standards cannot be stopped simply by electing Democratic "friends of labor" into office because all these policies have bipartisan support.

SWP candidates say that labor and its allies, Blacks, Latinos, women and small farmers, must form a party of their own, based on a fighting trade union movement as the only realistic first step toward the resolution of the capitalist crisis.

Although Lenhoff has time to make racist slurs about the manner of speech of Mel Mason, our presidential candidate (who is black), he completely ignored the entirety of the SWP program as outlined above.

Our campaign invites the support and participation of all who agree with our perspective. Watch for announcements of upcoming events.

W.T. Peterson

Selective coverage?

Editor:

We are writing this letter in reference to the recent student government elections. On Wednesday, March 28, the students of Florida State University were asked to elect a student body president, and vote on a number of straw ballot issues. One issue of great importance was the presidential preference vote.

We are extremely puzzled as to the reason why the results of these straw ballots were not published. We would hate to think that the results were not published because the vote did not coincide with the leftist views of your editorial board. Could it be that President Reagan won this vote? Could it be that capital punishment was favored? We find it puzzling why the Flumbeau choise to publish last year's ballot results on the nuclear freeze, while ignoring the possible proconservative vote this year.

Should we call this selective journalism, or censorship? We believe that the Flambeau has a responsibility to publish the results of the ballotuncensored

> Brian T. King Jeff Howell

Conservative Student Agenda Editor's note: We didn't get the straw ballot results Wednesday night because we did not have space to run them in Thursday's paper. Subsequent attempts to contact Elections Commissioner Marcus Bustad to get the straw poll results proved unsuccessful. Tuesday, we were able to get the results from Student Senate President Ed Brosman. They are printed on page three of today's edition.

The florist was clearly bored by this one. The arrangements get more like a Dali sculpture as you go along. Never fear, Jenne also has a basket with a cute cuddly donkey, a box of Camembert and a bottle of (doubtless numbingly sweet) 1982 Liebfraumilch. Tres Uptown her pockets during the prayer (posture!). Curtis Peterson neglects to introduce Margie Mixson. The Lieutenant Governor gesticulates wildly towards the Senate President "Um-er-" says Peterson, correcting himself and mumbling stuff about through a glass darkly

At 11/13 a.m., Governor Bob enters with his entourage of Swiss Guards, jesters and toadeaters. He is introduced as "the Honorable Bob Graham" Why not Robert? Much more elegant. The Hon. Bob is just too curtoon And the man has got on that dainn Florida tie again (Miss Adele! Please! Buy your honey a tie! They have nice ones at Nic's)

The State of the State: A state of mind. The Governor congratulates himself and the Legislature on massed wonderfulness: "The job is getting done in Florida And he sings the litany of arcane road projects from Naples to Walton County (the exciting world of the DOT). He tells of how crime is down by 20 percent despite the satanic efforts of "Cuban Communist dictator Fidel Castro" who sent us all his demons and monsters and nasty old drugs (Go get 'em, Bob)

But no. Governor Bob wants ment pay and no new taxes. Unimaginative fellow.

The Twilight Zone: The speech starts to make no more sense than a Dadaist tract. "Ours can be a future of widely distributed excellence." Kind of spread around like cheap peanut butter? Then Bob allows as how three million extra bodies will inhabit Florida by 1995. That's awful. I just hope to God they don't want to land on North Florida. Governor Bob pauses for questions. So does Dempsey Barron. Dempsey gets a much bigger audience. He is NOT wearing a Florida tie

Mondale trespassed on Hart's turf to win in New York

CHITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

NEW YORK—Walter Mondale scored a comfortable victory over Gaty Hart in the delegate-rich New York Democratic presidential primary Tuesday night with Jesse Jackson running up a heavy black vote

Mondale ran strong across the state, even in the rural areas and suburbs where Hart has scored well in the past. The strength of Mondale's vote came from New York City, which provides more than half the statewide tally.

With 33 percent of the districts reporting, Mondale had 181,477 votes or 50 percent, Hart had 124,952 or 35 percent, and Jackson had 47,049 or 13 percent

Jackson reportedly pulled 80 percent of the black vote.

"I feel very good about the results." Mondale said as he left his residence to address supporters at a victory rally. "I think it proves that our message on the only question that counts is starting to come through," he added, referring to the question that he has made his campaign theme—"Who would be the best president?"

Hart's campaign manager, Oliver Hinkel said of New York: "It's not Hart country: But I think we did very well and we're pleased."

Hart had been anticipating a New York defeat by saying earlier in the day he would be satisfied with a strong second place finish

The battle between Mondale and Hart for the state's 252 Democratic National Convention delegates was expected to be closer, with Mondale adding to his edge in that crucial part of the marathon contest for the Deomeratic nomination.

The results were apparent early in New York, with NIK calling Mondale the likely winner by a wide margin two hours before the polls closed at 9 p.m. EST. Network polls of voters leaving the balloting showed a heavy preference for the former vice-president, especially among the Jewish and labor blocs.

ABC said Mondale was taking the Jewish vote 55 percent to 38 percent over Hart and the labor vote 42 percent to 24 percent. Jackson was getting 31 percent of the labor vote, but only 2 percent of the Jewish vote

More than I million Democrats voted in New York, which will select 252 delegates to the Democratic National Convention

Going into New York, the latest United Press International nationwide delegate count gave Mondale 729, Hart 440 and Jackson 101, with 325 uncommitted and 35 for other candidates.

Wisconsin also held a primary Tuesday, but it was a "beauty contest" with no impact on how the state picks its delegates. Wisconsin Democrats will begin caucuses Saturday to determine how to divide up the first 53 of the state's 80 convention delegates.

Hart, seeking to keep expectations down, said a strong second-place finish in New York would be victory enough for him.

He spent part of the morning touring a New York City day-care center and then flew to Philadelphia to campaign for next week's Pennsylvania primary.

Hart declined to predict victory, blaming "a very negative campaign on the other side" for his lowered expectations.

Hart let his $1 million advertising campaign carry most of his message to New York voters. Mondale, under severe financial restrictions as he approaches the national campaign spending limit, attacked his rival bitterly in the closing days, especially in two televised debates.

Mondale counted heavily in New York on a brigade of bigname Democrats, including 60 of the state's 62 country chairmen, Gov. Mario Cuomo, Sen. Duniel Moynihan and New York City Mayor Ed Koch.

Jackson, marching to the strains of "Climb Up The Mountain," escorted hundreds of supporters to a Harlem polling place on primary day in his effort to bring out a record number of black voters.

At an earlier speech at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, Jackson appeared with his brother, Charles, and mother, Helen

"The ultimate victory has already been won. We've won our self respect," he said

Walter Mondale

The former vice president did well across the spectrum in the New York primary. Jesse Jackson, meanwhile, did well amoung black voters, pulling 80 percent of the black vote.

DURBAN, South Africa—A car packed with explosives sent metal and glass flying through the air Tuesday on a crowded beachfront road in the resort city of Durban, killing three people and injuring 22 other, police said

The government blamed the African National Congress. The ANC has vowed to step up attacks against white-ruled south Africa despite the country's recent security pact with Marxist Mozambique, which had been aiding the guerrillas.

The bomb exploded during morning rush hour, gouging a 3-foot-deep crater in the road and shattering windows for 500 yards along the high-rise explanade in the popular resort city, police said.

NEW DELHI, India—Army troops clashed with rampaging mobs in Punjab state Tuesday, leaving 10 dead in renewed violence triggered by the assassination by suspected. Sikh gummen of a local supporter of the government.

Police were ordered to shoot lawbreakers on sight after a police officer was gored to death by a sword and another beaten to death by the 20,000 clashing Hindu and Sikh rioters in Amritsar, 25 miles northeast of New Dethi

NEW DELHI, India—Afghan rebels killed or captured at least 40 Soviet troops at a military post in southwestern Afghanistan, then invited villagers to view their victims—alive and dead, Western diplomats said Tuesday

Rebels also claimed to have killed 25 Soviet troops conducting an anti-military sweep Friday in Ghazni, 72 miles southwest of the Afghan capital of Kabul, a diplomat said.

The rebels, who are fighting to oust 105,000 Soviet soldiers supporting the Marxist regime of President Babrak Karmal, overran the Soviet post at Pashmol March 16, suffering heavy casualties, the diplomats said.

MOSCOW—A Soyuz I-11 rocket blasted off from the Central Asian desert Tuesday, carrying India's first cosmonaut—with his own supply of curry, guavas and mangoes—and two Soviets to the Salvut-7 space station

Soviet television showed the spacecraft

roaring off in a fiery blaze at 8.08 a.m. EST from a launchpad at the Baikonur cosmodrome in Kazakstan, 1,200 miles southeast of the capital

It was the first televised launch since a Soviet-French mission 22 months ago.

SAN FRANCISCO—A federal appeals court ruled Tuesday that accused spy James D. Harper, charged with selling top-secret Sibcon Valley missile data to Soviet agents, cannot be given the death penalty if he is convicted.

The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled the death penalty portion of the Espionage Act was unconstitutional and removed it from consideration in the trial.

WASHINGTON—President Reagan told Republican congressional leaders Tuesday Salvadoran troops may be going into combat with only one clip of ammunition and urged quick action on his call for emergency military aid.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes warned that the longer Congress delays, the more likely it is Reagan will use his discretionary powers to provide the aid without congressional action

Assistant Senate Republican leader Ted Stevens said he told the president "delay, delay, delay" by Democrats is making Senate passage of emergency aid difficult

And House Republican Leader Robert Michel noted House Speaker Thomas O'Neill wants to put the issue off until after the Easter recess, which begins April 13.

STATE

TALLAHASSEF—Insurance Commissioner Bill Gunter said Tuesday he had approved a 23.5 percent, increase in automobile insurance rates for high-risk drivers.

The increase was filed by the Florida Joint Underwriting Association (FJUA), a shared-risk pool made up of all auto insurers in Florida. It provides last-resort coverage to drivers who can't get insurance in the open market.

The higher rates, which were filed in November and have been under consideration by Gunter's office, took effect March 15 for new business and will be effective for renewal policies May 1

Attorneys fight for condemned inmates

FROM WIRE REPORTS

Appeals seeking to stop the execution of Elmo Patrick Sonnier of Louisiana were filed Tuesday in an attempt to show the condemned man's brother wants to take the blame as the trigger man who shot and killed two teenagers, and attorneys for Arthur Frederick Goode, 29, convicted of the rape-murder of two small boys in Florida petitioned a federal judge for a stay of execution.

Sonnier, whose last appeal to the state Pardon Board was rejected Saturday, asked a new lawyer, William Quigley of New Orleans, Sunday to defend him in the 1977 shooting deaths of Loretta Bourque, 18, and David LeBlanc, 16, of New Iberia, La.

Quigley said he asked state District Judge C. Thomas Bienvenue Jr. and the state Supreme Court in New Orleans Tuesday to stop the execution.

Prosecutor Dracos Burke said Quigley was claiming that Sonnier's brother, Eddie James Sonnier, was ready to sign an affidavit saying he was the triggerman. Quigley said his appeals include several affidavits, "including a letter from his brother to the governor that goes to the determination of who actually did the killing."

Meanwhile, in Florida, U.S. District Judge W. Terrell Hodges was petitioned in mid-afternoon by Miami lawyer Charles Senatore, one day fter the Florida Supreme Court refused to block Goode's execution. The massive court files, involving Goode's case were taken to Hodges in his chambers.

Hodges reviewed the case and said he would decide Wednesday whether to grant a hearing on the petition.

The petition claims that Goode is insane and psychotic and requested a stay, citing Florida law and the U.S. Constitution which prohibit the execution of insane offenders.

The petition asks that the court grant the stay of execution and order Goode committed to the state hospital for the

A brutal, street-wise update of 'film noir'

BY FRANK YOUNG

An exceptional resurrection of films noirs, those gloomy meditations on the darker side of life, Reinhard Hauff's 1981. Slow Attack manages to straddle the fences between past, present and future. Despite its definite debit to Hollywood crime movies, its vision of urban decay, corruption, and burned-out decadence is unmistakably modern.

A collaboration between director Hauff and screenwriter/star Burkhard Driest (who, between them, also made something called The Brutalization of Franz Blum, which everyone seemed to like). Slow Attack is a study of losers on every level of the social structure, starting from the lowest rung and working its way up.

Down at the very bottom are Nik (Driest) and Henry (Rolf Zacher), two ex-cons who fabricate a wild plot to kidnap a tyccon and ransom him. Nik is a pock marked also-ran who will do anything for a quick buck—even prostitute himself to salivating old men. He has ambitions of being a published novelist. Henry, on the other hand, is just plain crazy.

Between their perverse idylls together. Nik runs through a succession of women, including his estranged ex wife (Katja Rupe, I believe—I had no scorecard). Nik is only interested in the caper for its potential literary value. But Henry decides to go through with it, despite multiple physical complications—including a heroin addiction and a gangreneinfested leg. He dies trying (quite graphically) and Nik escapes guilt-free with a successful book.

Slow Attack is twice as grisly as any slasher movie—more so because the violence is so realistic. Played against one of the seamiest, grimy stretches of Germany—a cavalcade of pool-halls, whorehouses and other dives—Hauff's film is intensely visual, the sound is just there for filler. You can watch Slow Attack silent, ignore the subtitles (which, really, never do more than poorly condense what's being said) and still absorb it on every level. The pictures say that much on their own. You may have to turn away more than once—this film's definitely not recommended post-meal viewing

Violence aside, Slow Attack displays a measured, cool intelligence. Like Fassbinder, Hauff obviously delights in dissecting society, showing the muckety-mucks aren't any better than the lowest of low. In fact, it's advantageous to have street-savvy—otherwise you're just plain impotent. Nik may be a creature when all's said and done, but he knows his way around.

Show Attack is overlong—an American director could have brought it in fifteen minutes shorter than its 112. There are some—but not many—extraneous moments. But if Hauff lacks the trim style of the noir directors past—Edgar Ulmer, Billy Wilder, Joseph Lewis and their ilk—his vibrant commando-teatics more than take up the slack. His film is, indeed, a very deliberate, slow attack—on his characters, society, and any viewer's senses. Thoughtful viscera may not completely exist yet, but Hauff is on his way to designing it on brightest, most brutal terms.

Slow Attack, directed by Reinhard Hauff, screens tonight in FSU's Moore Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

Gaye, Sr. to be charged with murder not manslaughter

LOS ANGELES—The preacher father of singer Marvin Caye will be charged with murder rather than manslaughter in the death of his son because of a "significant" time large between shots fired, propositions.

manslaughter in the death of his son because of a "significant" time lapse between shots fired, prosecutors said Tuesday.

Deputy District Attorney Robert Schirn said Marvin Gave Sr., 69, will be arraigned Wednesday and prosecutors said they will ask that bail be set at $100,000

Although the shooting followed an argument, Schirn said he chose to file murder charges rather than manslaughter because, "There were two shots fired and there was a significant lapse of time between shots to warrant the filing of a murder charge."

He did not disclose the amount of time between shots and a coroner's spokesman said surgeons who performed as autops) on the singer were unaware of the time lapse.

If convicted of first degree murder, Gaye could face a maximum sentence of 25 years to life with an additional two years tacked on for use of a firearm. A second degree murder conviction carries a maximum penalty of 15 years to his.

NASHVILLE, Tenn - The perfect companion for those who have teenage boys and girls has been resurrected

It's called Don't Or, Directions for Avoiding Improprieties in Conduct and Common Errors of Speech

It was first published 100 years ago by D. Appleton and Co., in New York, and written by "Censor"

Now, Algonquin Books (Post Office Box 2225, Chapel Hill, NC) is republishing this small volume. It sells for $5.95 in cloth

It seems that Algonquin senior editor Shannon Ravenel was cleaning out her great aunt's house in Charleston, S.C. several summers ago and came upon a frayed copy of Don't

The North Carolina publisher felt it was worth reissuing and they are right.

Although some of the advice will be considered old-(ashioned (even chauvinist), Don't bears scrutiny today at the very least just to see how things have changed over a

. For example, Censor begins his don'ts by saying that one should never be late for the supper table. This applies whether one is an invited guest or simply one of the family

Censor also tells diners not to sit a foot away from the table or sit iammed up against it

It's been observed that many now dispense with the use of a napkin, but Censor assumes that everyone uses such with the advice "Don't tuck your napkin under your chin, or spread your napkin over your lap, let it fall over your

He goes on with some more advice:

"Don't serve gentlemen at your table before ALL the bidies are served, including those who are members of your own household

"Don't eat soup from the end of the spoon, but from the side. Don't gurgle, or draw in your breath, or make other noises when eating soup. Don't ask for a second service of

"Don't bend over your place, or drop your head to get each mouthful Keep an upright attitude as nearly as you can without being stiff.

"Don't bite your bread Break it off. Don't break your bread into your soup

Don't eat with your knife. Never put your knife into vour mouth. Don't load up the fork with food with your knife and then cart it, as it were to your mouth. Take up on the fork what it can easily carry, and no more

With that latter advice comes a footnote about the use of a knife for eating. Censor said that, "This advice has been declared unnecessary for people of any degree of social culture, but the fact is that while eating with the knife is much less common than formerly, instances of it may still be witnessed

Amen to that Still talking about eating, the 19th Century athor advises, "Don't eat fast, or gorge. Take always plenty of time. Haste is vulgar.

"Don't take huge mouthfuls, or fill your mouth with too much food, and don't masticate audibly. Fat quietly and casily.

"Don't spread out your elbows, elevate your glass as it you were going to stand it inverted on your nose. Bring the glass perpendicularly to the lips, and then lift it to a slight angle

"Don't reject bits of bone, or other substances, by spitting them back into the plate. Quietly eject them upon your fork, holding it to your lips, and then place them on the plate. Fruit stones may be removed by the fingers

"Don't stretch across another's plate in order to reach

"Don't talk when your mouth is full-never, in fact, have your mouth full. It is more healthful and in better taste to eat by small morsels.

"Don't eat onions or garlic, unless you are dining alone, and intend to remain alone some hours thereafter. It is not desirable to carry with us unpleasant evidences of what we have been eating or drinking.

Research determined that Censor was Oliver Bell Bunce who died in 1890, only six years following the publication of his little book of don'ts

Bunce was a literary manager of Appleton and a novelist and playwright. His other literary contributions never received the popularity of Don't which went through numerous editions, the last as recently as in the 1920s

According to research by Margaret Mills Harper of Algonquin, Bunce took as his mission the schooling of the newly rich post Civil War middle class

He has chapters on demeanor at the table, in dress and personal habits, in the drawing room, in public, in speech, in general, for womankind and for young people

The younger people are advised:

"Don't fail to be obedient to your parents and teachers, respectful to all people older than yourself, kind to your playmates and servants, considerate of other people's wishes and feelings, gentle and modest in your demeanor, neat in your attire, and observant of all the little rules that make what are called good manners

Caulkins: U.S. swimmers have talent to win at the L.A. Summer Olympics

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

INDIANAPOLIS-Tracy Caulkins, arguably the best American ever to hit the water, swam her worst national meet since 1976 but still managed to enlarge her already unprecendented collection of national titles

That says something about where the elite performers of U.S. swimming stand heading into this Olympic summer

"I think we're in pretty good shape for LA," said Caulkins, who had just won her 48th national championship at the U.S. Swimming Indoor Nationals, which finished a five-day run over the weekend

"We've definitely got the talent, the people that can win," she said "It's a matter of really wanting it, and getting out there and doing it."

Most observers believe the top U.S. performances in Los Angeles will come from the men's team, which holds seven current world records, including four set just last August

American women now own just four world marks, none more recent than Mary T. Meagher's 1981 100- and 200meter butterfly marks

"We've won before," said Caulkins, "Right now, the women may not be on top, but we can be. As long as we · believe that, we'll be real competitive."

Before last week, the versatile Caulkins had never recorded worse than two firsts and two seconds in a national championship since she first broke into the big

More often than not, she was a three-time winner at the nationals, and several times she won four individual event championships at a crack

But last week, Caulkins won only the 200-meter individual medley, finishing an uncharacteristic ninth in the 200 backstroke, third in the 100 breastroke and scratching from the finals of the 400 individual medley after qualifying for the second seed

But Caulkins insisted-and poolside experts agreed-that the apparent slump was really nothing more than a letdown after her six-win three-American record performance at the women's NCAAs two weeks earlier.

"My confidence is pretty high right now," said Caulkins.

"I know this meet is not an indication of how well I can perform. I just want to get back to work.

The former world-record holder and youngest-ever winner of the Sullivan Award as the outstanding U.S. amateur athlete plans to swim as many four events at June's Olympic Trials in Indianapolis the 200 and 400 individual medleys, either the 200 butterfly or 200 backstroke and probably the 100 breastroke

There were no world or American records set during last week's meet, due partly to the absence of top collegiate swimmers who skipped it because of its unusual proximity to last month's men's and women's NCAAs

But there were many indications that the U.S. Olympic team is going to be a tough squad to make Meagher won the 15th, 16th and 17th national titles of her career, including her first in freesisle. Nancy Hogshead, a 1980 Olympic team selection who then quit swimming for two years, came back with a surprising win in the 100 freestyle, three seconds in individual events and relay win

Distance star Tiffany Cohen won the 800 freestyle, then took the 400 with the best time she's recorded in the event except after a pre-meet taper. Cohen skipped the 1,500 free, but Michele Richardson, 14, checked in with the sixthfastest time ever swum

"I lost some weight," said the 5-foot-6, 112-pound high school freshman. "I lost about 10 pounds, and since then I've been swimming a lot faster."

On the men's side, former world record holder Bill Barrett did what he set out to do, winning the 200 individual medley by a convincing 2-3 seconds

"I think I let them know I'm still around and still feeling good," said the 24-year-old UCLA graduate

Jeff Kostoff, the top U.S. hope against the USSR's Vladimir Salnikov, came back after an American record in the 1,650-yard freestyle at the NCAAs days earlier to win the 800 and 1,500 free events

"It's not impossible, but it's not easy." Kostoff said of his task against Salnikov, who owns the world records at 400, 800 and 1,500 meters. "I've got a long way to go."

Florida to establish boxing commission

TALLAHASSII A House committee approved legislation Tuesday that would create a three-member state boxing commission to be appointed by the governor to regulate professional bouts

The bill, passed by the House Committee on Regulated Industries and Licensing, would require a physician be present at all fights and would mandate that each fighter have a pre-fight physical examination and at least $5,000 in life insurance

The legislation would also establish boxing weight classes and would set a minimum glove weight of six ounces.

"This will bring a little sanity back into boxing," said Rep. Gene Ready, D-Lakeland, the bill's principal sponsor

Gale Porter, chairman of the Tampa Boxing Commission, told the committee such a statewide panel is hadly needed

"I have seen many things occur in the boxing profession that can be corrected," said Porter

Ready said the legislation would cost the state about $2,000 a year above what it would raise from licenses and permits

The measure would have given the commission jurisdiction over amateur boxing, but the panel approved an amendment by Rep. Bob Reynolds, D. Miami Lakes, to restrict it to professional bouts

Some officials have blamed Florida's lack of enforceed health and safety standards for several boxing related injuries and deaths

The bill would also mandate that fighters be 18 or older to participate in professional boxing. Persons 16 or 1" would be limited to amateur competition.

The measure requires one referee and two judges attend each bout. It also makes "shams or collusive contests" second degree misdemeanors

Commission members, appointed by the governor, would serve staggered terms. The commission's headquarters would be in Lakeland.

STARKE—The Supreme Court Wednesday night denied a stay of execution for child killer Arthur Frederick Goode III, scheduled to die in Florida's electric chair this morning.

On a 6-2 vote, the high court turned down an appeal of a Florida Supreme Court decision against Goode. There was a slim possibility Goode's attorneys would petition the Supreme Court later Wednesday night to reverse the opinion of a three-judge panel of a federal appeals court in Atlanta.

The U.S. 11th Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta rejected Goode's appeal in a four-page decision shortly after 8 p.m. Goode earlier Wednesday also lost an appeal before a federal district judge in Tampa.

Less than 90 minutes after the Atlanta court acted, the Supreme Court issued a one paragraph refusal to stay Goode's execution. Justices William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall cast their traditional votes against capital punishment in all circumstances.

Goode, 30, was scheduled to die in the electric chair at Florida State Prison at 7 a.m. EST today for the sexkilling of 9-year-old Jason Verdow of Cape Coral.

While the appellate court had the petition under consideration, Goode's attorneys filed an emergency application with Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell late Wednesday, asking him to halt the electrocution so the full court can review the argument Goode should not be put to death because he is insane.

The Florida attorney general's office filed papers at the same time asking Powell to reject the request for a stay.

As his attorneys fought to save him from the electric chair. Goode, a self-proclaimed pedophiliac who also killed an II-year-old boy in Virginia, told reporters at the prison Wednesday afternoon he would bring the two victims back to life if he could. But he indicated no remorse for the killings.

'I'm not looking forward to dying'

UNITED PRINS INTERNATIONAL

STARKE — Condemned child-killer Arthur Frederick Goode III said Wednesday in an hour-long interview he would bring the two boys he raped and killed back to life if he could, but showed no remorse for the murders.

Goode, 30, was scheduled to die at 7 a.m. EST today in Florida's electric chair for the 1976 sex-killing of 9-year-old Jason Verdow of Cape Coral. He also has been convicted in the similar murder of an 11-year-old boy from Falls Church, Va.

Goode, who appeared calm while being questioned by two dozen reporters, said he "loves all children" but society was against him.

"I murdered those two boys because society is prejudiced against me," said Goode, a self-proclaimed pedophiliac. "They (society) want me tortured and executed.

Reagan meets press, seeks negotiations on chemical weapons

UNITED PRINS INTERNATIONAL

WASHINGTON—President Reagan called on the Soviet Union Wednesday to join in a global ban on the production, possession and use of all chemical weapons as a step toward ridding the world of "these terrible weapons."

Reagan opened his 23rd formal news conference by announcing that he is sending Vice-president George Bush to Geneva in two weeks to present a draft treaty to the Soviets at a meeting of the U.S. Committee on Disarmament.

Reagan said the proposal for a "comprehensive ban"—described by U.S. officials as more comprehensive than a chemical weapons moratorium offered earlier by Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko—will include "bold and sound" procedures to ensure compliance by both sides

Reagan stressed that the United States must maintain and upgrade its chemical arsenal to offset a "massive arsenal" that the Soviets have, repeating the argument he has used in discussing other weapons limitation plans.

"Without a modern and credible deterrent," he said, "the prospects for achieving a comprehensive ban would be significantly diminished."

Reagan has asked for $1.1 billion in his fiscal 1985 budget for chemical warfare projects.

Again accusing the Soviets of using chemical and toxic agents, Reagan said, "The shortcomings of earlier chemical weapons treaties have been made tragically clear in recent years."

"The use of these terrible weapons also has serious implications for our own security," he said.

The administration also has accused Iraq of using chemical weapons in its long and bitter Persian Gulf War with Iran in violation of a post-WorldWar I international agreement banning their use.

Announcement of the proposed treaty signaled the start of a new campaign-year peace offensive by Reagan, whose foreign policy has been under attack by Democrats, stung by defeat in Lebanon and threatened by stalemate over Central America.

In keeping with the peace theme, Reagan also expressed his "deep personal regret" that the Soviets had not resumed talks on limiting medium-range nuclear missiles and strategic arms. "So far they have ignored the will of the world" in refusing to return to the table, he said.

In his second news conference of the election year, Reagan, wearing a dark suit and red tie, faced questions about the U.S. withdrawal from Lebanon, use of U.S. military force abroad, the impact of his budgets on the women and the poor, and the moral integrity of his appointees in the administration.

Asked about statements by Secretary of State George Shultz indicating that more preemptive military strikes against potential terrorists might serve the cause of peace, he replied, "I don't think that George meant to imply anything of that kind...that is, that military strength is a definite part of diplomacy."

He also defended his own killer satellite plans, saying "the Soviet Union is ahead of us" in that area of outer-space weaponry and "we're still in the stage of studying such a thing."

"I reject the use of the word sleaze," Reagan said when asked about Democratic charges that his administration is filled with graft.

"I believe the halls of government are as sacred as our

Reaves, Williams win big at FAMU

In spite of the rain Tuesday, approximately 1,000 Florida A&M University students - or 20 percent of the voters turned out to vote Darryl Reaves and his running mate Tyrone Williams into office as FAMU's student body president and vice president

Reaves and Williams ran on a platform of improving FAMU's library (many FAMU students currently have to bus in to Stroner Library to get books they need to write class papers), bringing more movies to campus, and changing I AMU's grade forgiveness policy

At FAMU, when a student gets an "F" in certain classes she he can take it over, but the "F" stays on the student's transcript - even though it isn't averaged into the student's overall grade point average. Reaves and Williams plan to work to get that "I" expunged from the student's record one she he has a new grade for the course

Reaves and Williams got 70 percent of the vote, but write-in candidates Victor Fields and Ronell Bright did very well with 30 percent of the vote - Fields had been on the official ballot, but was forced to run as a write in when his original running mate Derek Austin was disqualified for

Fields and Bright ran on a platform similar to the winners', with an emphasis on ending student apathy at FAMU

This year, FAMU SG hopefuls were allowed to campaign on election day, something student electoral commissioner Herman Martin said probaby accounts for the twenty percent turnout. Martin also reported no infractions of the rules during this year's election

FAMU students didn't get a chance to vote for a presidential candidate in a straw ballot, but they did elect a Miss FAMU - Brenda Lee, a junior majoring in business administration

Florida Bar Association honors FSU law school graduate for free legal aid work

Cecil Davis believes that lawyers have a responsibility to the poor

Following Reagan

The U.S. Senate — determined, apparently, to follow President Reagan blindly to hell if that's where he wants to go — knocked back an attempt by Sen. Edward Kennedy to defer a $61.7 million aid package to El Salvador until after that country's presidential run-off election next month. Now it's up to the House to impose some reality on U.S. Central American policy.

Fortunately, the House seems more likely than the Senate to challenge some of the president's presumptions about the crisis in El Salvador. The House would rather wait until the runoff determines whether Roberto D'Aubuisson or Jose Napoleon Duarte — that is, a "pathological killer" or and ineffectual centrist — becomes the next president of El Salvador before funnelling more guns and bullets into that war-torn nation.

The runoff is part of the much heralded "democracy" Reagan is trying to graft on the Salvadoran body politic. But if the Salvadorans really want democracy, there's no guarantee the current elections will give it to them. Democratic rule, after all, implies that the civilian government chosen by the people would be able to control the military that is now bent upon killing them. There's nothing to indicate D'Aubuisson, should he win, would be willing to rein in the military and the death squads linked to the military—indeed, there's good evidence he's the kingpin of those death squads. Similarly, there's little to suggest Duarte could control the killers.

The problem is that the Reagan administration is, if unintentionally, doing its best to shore up the death squads, even as it implores the Salvadorans to bring the killers to justice. The administration warns consistently of the dire consequences of the Salvadorans' failure to bring accused killers to trial, but then refused to back up the warnings with actions. Indeed, Reagan calls those in Congress who would tie aid to respect for human rights appeasers or worse.

Now there's another example of the failure of Reagan's administration to impose its will in El Salvador; the release of Capt. Eduardo Alphonso Avila, held as a witness to the murder of two American labor advisors gunned down in a San Salvador hotel lounge in 1981. The American embassy protested Avila's release to no avail How does the Reagan administration make its displeasure known? By continuing its appeals for $61 million in additional military aid.

This sort of thing breeds contempt, particularly among the death squads, to whom it must be clear that Reagan cares not a fig for human rights — that all this talk of democracy is just that — talk.

If the president thinks himself a friend of democracy, we suggest he read a little bit more about those "founding fathers" of the American system he is so fond of quoting. They knew that respect for human rights is the foundation of democracy. Unless the Salvadorans share that respect they will never enjoy the democracy the president envisions for them.

We doubt even $61 million will buy that for the Salvadorans.

When we began Students for Peace seven months ago, we never thought it would become the group it is today. From a mere five members to a continually growing 75 members, Students for Peace is one of the fastest growing groups on campus. We would like to thank all of those members who have worked hard to keep Students for Peace together and for pulling off a successful "Freeze Work."

The peace movement is growing, friends. There are people all around the world realizing the urgent need for a halt to the arms race and for research into successful conflict-resolution. We will miss all of you as we embark on our "Walk for the Earth", but will always be grateful for the opportunity to share the nurturing of this seed of peace.

Thank you, students

'The Doling Dozen'

Editor:

The 1984 legislative session is just beginning. Some of the major issues will include responses to Amendment One, growth management, health care cost containment, educational reform and interstate banking. The pressures on legislators will be incredible.

Special interest groups are the root of these pressures. They dole out campaign contributions both during and after the session. Some of our legislators will receive rewards for their good behavior. Others will find their stockings empty.

Interest groups are most notably recognized as PACs (Political Action Committees). Over 440 state-based PACs operate in Florida. Common Cause has labelled the most generous PACs "The Doling Dozen." Among the top monied interests are realtors, doctors, bankers and lawyers. Most legislative battles are lost without a strong PAC.

Organized PACs aren't the only source of financial pressure in Tallahassee. Contributions also originate from corporations and individuals representing special interests. Their "financial assistance" is substantial, raising the suspicion that votes can be bought. At the very least, money keeps the legislative machinery well-greased. But our legislature should never be for sale.

It's time to re-examine the influence special interest campaign contributions have on legislators. Further campaign finance reforms are long overdue. Legislators must be encouraged to eliminate the insidious influence money has upon our elected representatives.

According to state Sen. Frank Mann, "The bottom line is..., when you don't take money from any of the hundreds of special interest groups that lobby us constantly in Tallahassee, it makes it a lot easier to act as a statesman instead of a politician at decision time."

Florida needs more statespersons and fewer politicians. Let's change the way business is conducted in Tallahassee.

Editor

Springtime Tallahassee is a celebration of the picturesque beauty found in Tallahassee this time of year. It is a time to enjoy the wonders of Spring through an assortment of blooms symbolizing the new life beginning this season.

Springtime Tallahassee — the organization — should be commended for its efforts in bringing these lovely scenes to the attention of area residents. It is often easy to forget how fortunate we Floridians are in witnessing illustrations of our unique environment.

Appreciation of Florida's environment receives much more attention now than in past years Considering the past wrongs carried out against Florida's groundwater, rivers, bays and so forth, thit new attention is an encouraging sign. Indeed, allowing pollutaints to enter Florida's ecosystem can no longer be tolerated.

In the spirit of this rising sentiment, a coalition of groups emerged under the name CLEAN-UP '84. It's long term goal: preserve our state's natural environment for present and future generations. Accomplishing this task will be challenging to say the least. The first step will be to place a constitutional amendment on the November ballot, giving Floridians the right — by law — to a healthy environment. To do so will require a mass petition drive and the support of Florida voters.

This is why CLEAN-UP '84 volunteers will be at Springtime Tallahassee this Saturday, April 7, collecting petition signatures. Springtime Tallahassee and CLEAN-UP '84 have similar purposes; what better way to celebrate the area's beauty then by enjoying it now and ensuring future generations the same opportunity.

If you see CLEAN-UP '84 volunteers with petitions on Saturday, please, take the time to talk with them and review the petition. It's for Florida's future health as well as your own.

Panels consider penalties for sex crimes

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Feminist legislators, outraged by criminal sentencing guidelines that can see free some rapists on probation, want to mandate prison time for sex offenders

And in gang rape cases, like the recent conviction of four men in New Bedford, Mass, a pending proposal would add time to the usual sentences for sexual battery.

The measure by Sen Robert B Crawford, D Winter Haven, started out as an effort to clarify age limits for statutory rape - so that all 11 year olds would be protected by the existing law. Crawford said some courts have ruled that children past their 11th birthdays are not covered by the law

His bill would set the minimum age of consent at 12.

Sen Betty Castor, D Tampa, offered an amendment to increase prison sentences for gang rape. Depending on the age of the victim and degree of force involved, rape penalties usually range from 15 years to life - although probation is possible in very few cases.

The Castor amendment provides that, if more than one assailant is involved, a second-degree felons would be upgraded to a first degree felons, and a first degree felons would become a life felony - thus increasing possible prison penalties to life in prison and eliminating probation

"Women in this state are not safe," she said. "Sexual offenders are serving ridiculously light sentences "

Sen Roberta Fox, D-Miami, said the punishment for gang rape should be greater than for individual attacks because "the crime creates more terror, more harm and more risk to the victim "

Another amendment to the bill would mandate threeyear prison sentences for all rapists. Sen. Dick Langley, R. Clermont, said almost all rapists go to jail anyway - but that he wanted to eliminate the probation prospects of a very few first offenders who are placed on "community control."

It's possible that you could rape a 13-year-old and receive community control," he said. "Not many years ago, that was a hanging offense; now, it can be a probation offense, like stealing from the dime store."

The House appropriations committee followed the lead of the Senate and Wednesday voted to ad fatal child abuse to the list of crimes punishable by the death penalty.

The committee voted 25-2 for the bill (HB 135) and sent

Reps Helen Gordon Davis, D Tampa, and Heanor Weinstock, D Paim Beach

According to a committee report, there were 49 deaths from "child battery and other maltreatment" in Florida from 1979 to 1982. The bill would increase the maximum penalty for the crime from 15 years in prison

The Senate unanimously passed a simila bill Tuesday, the first day of the legislative session. Sen. John Vogt, D. Cocoa Beach, said his bill was prompted by a Seminole County case in which a child was tortured for a week by a man who could only be tried for manslaughter because it could not be proved he intended to kill the child.

A House committee postponed action Thursday on a bill to give sexual offenders the chance to reduce their sentences by undergoing "chemical castration" with drugs designed to lower the sex drive

The bill (HB 766) introduced by Rep. J. Keith Ainold, D Fort Myers, would have employed the experimental drug Depo Provera, which sharply reduces the production of the male hormone testosterone

"It has been labeled a chemical castration bill," said the 24 sear old lawmaker "I would use the term quite cautiously. There is no castration. It is a drug that simply reduces the sexual drive of those using the drug

'Women in this state are not safe. Sexual offenders are receiving ridiculously light sentences.'

- Sen. Betty Castor

A Department of Corrections psychiatrist spoke against the use of the drug, pointing out it has not been approved for use by the Food and Drug Administration.

"The individual physician is probably going to be very reluctant to administer this treatment," said Dr. David E Taubel, director of psychiatric services for the department

Taubel said little is known about the long term effects of the drug, though it is known to cause high blood pressure

"Nobody really has an idea what happens to people who take Depo-Provera for a period of longer than one year." he said. However, he said the drug is "a treatment whose

Legislators won't flood Florida

UNITED PRESS INTLENATIONAL

An attempt to gut a comprehensive wetlands protection bill by requiring the flooding of huge sections of Florida was defeated without a vote Wednesday in a House committee

The amendment, offered by Rep. Charles R. Smith, D-Brooksville, would have required that all wetlands existing at the time Florida became a United States territory be "restored to the original extent and characteristic."

It would have required that vast expanses of the state that have been drained and built on be re-flooded, providing criminal penalties for violators, and would surely have doomed the bill

We'll read this (amendment) for entertainment value," said Rep. Jon Mills, D-Gainesville, chairman of the House natural resources committee.

"Well, that will take care of Miami Lakes," said Rep. Tim Murphy, D-Miami, in reference to a subdivision drained in west Dade County and now heavily developed.

Smith, seeing his amendment would not be adopted, with frew it.

In preparing the bill (PCB 84-6) by inserting noncontroversial amendments, the committee also made several other changes Wednesday

The bill is intended to give the Department of Natural Resources power to more stringently regulate freshwater wetlands. The current system allows regulators to consider only the effect on water quality a proposed development will have

Under the bill, the state would be able to take into account any effects on wildlife and fish habitats.

In an amendment by Mills, the committee on Wednesday also permitted DER to consider how a proposed development would affect historic or archaeological

Smith was able to convince the committee that DER should have to tell a builder why a building permit is turned

"Government always tells us what we cannot do and very rarely tells us what to do," Smith said. "Government has a responsibility to tell its citizens not only what's wrong, but also should have the responsibility to say how it could be

In another section, the bill had directed regulators to consider the "aesthetic" qualities of an area where building was contemplated. But the committee removed that requirement Wednesday

'You can't quantify that," said Rep. Dale Patchett, R-Vero Beach "What's pretty to me may not be pretty to

Committee members also decided the state should be able to regulate building in areas where waters have receded but could fill in again

The amendment gives DFR power over sections of the Kissimmee River in central Florida, which was channelized earlier in the century but which officials are working to restore to its natural state.

House plans for Florida's growth

BY MICHAEL MCCLELLAND
SPECIAL TO THE PLANDEAU

A House committee Wednesday took the first major step towards controlling Florida's growth in the coming years

The House Select Committee on Growth Management narrowly passed a bill that would require the governor's office to create a comprehensive state growth management plan. That plan would be used to guide regional growth in the state, including determining state funding of local projects.

Similar efforts to create a statewide growth plan have failed in the past, and this bill faces an uphill battle through the long legislative process — a fight foreshadowed by the Growth Management Committee's narrow 13.9 vote in favor of the bill.

"It (the close vote) shows a rough road ahead," said committee chairman Ray Liberti, D. West Palm Beach. "But it has passed the first hurdle, and that's important."

Liberti predicted that some sort of growth management bill would pass this

"Not necessarily this bill, but this is the skeleton," Liberti said "If passed by the full House and the Senate, the bill would require the governor's office to create a statewide growth management plan, concentrating on land use, water resources, and transportation systems. That plan wold be used as a guideline for state and regional agencies. No proposed growth as — such as a highway or a new bridge — would be funded by the state unless it fit in with the statewide plan.

The bill would also require the governor's office to peepare a long term study of the state's infrastructure needs that is, the basic services provided by the state—like schools, roads, bridges, utilities, etc. That infrastructure study would be included in the comprehensive plan, would be updated every year, and used to determine how much money the state would give to a region for infrastructure needs each year.

Once prepared by the governor's office, the comprehensive plan would go to the Florida Cabinet for approvaland from there to the Legislature for review

The House committee deliberately kept the Legislature's control over the plan to a minimum in order to prevent parochial battles that could bog down or destroy a comprehensive plan. Under the proposed bill, the Legislature could amend or reject the comprehensive plan only with a three-fifths vote of both the House and Senate. If the Legislature did not make such a vote, the plan would go into effect.

That limited legislative input was criticized by several members of the committee, and will likely be a source of controversy in any further debate on the bill

The committee debated at legth, and eventually rejected a proposed amendment that would have required legislative approval before a comprehensive plan could go into effect. The Senate version of the bill, which has not been voted on in committee as of yet, does call for legislative authority over the comprehensive plan.

The bill is based heavily on the findings of the Environmental Land Management Study Committee II (ELMS II) That committee was created by Gov Bob Graham almost two years ago and charged with preparing legislation to deal with the impact of rapid growth on the state's natural resources.

ELMS II Committee chairman Robert Rhodes, a Tallahassee attorney, argued in favor of legislative control over the plan, saying it was a compromise position that could help the bill win eventual passage. The committee narrowly rejected that argument, saying the Legislative already has the power to step in and rewrite the entire comprehensive plan concept if that becomes necessary.

In spite of the limited legislative input, Rhodes said he was not disappointed with the committee's decision

"The FLMS II approach was to get the Legislature directly involved in the process," Rhodes said. "This committee has just said, 'don't worry, we will be."

"I'm delighted the bill passed," Rhodes

Both the ELMS II Committee report and the Growth Management Committee bill have been endorsed by Graham

SG budget aims to increase services

BY MELINDA PARKER

Slumbering beneath the Florida State University hureaucracy is the far flung organization of student government, an agency that spends 2 million dollars of student money a year. The average student who takes 12 hours ends up giving S.G. $36 a semester in exchange for admission to S.G. funded events and for the use of S.G. agencies such as the Escort Service.

The 16th Student Senate was expected to approve next year's budget at its Wednesday evening meeting. If accepted by a majority of student senators, the proposal will then be passed to Student Body President Tom Abrams for approval. Then the budget will go to FSU President Bernie Sheer.

Senate President Ed Brosman is optimistic about the new budget

"There's been a lot of work done on this year's budget. I think that the people involved really care where the money is spent," Brosman said.

"The budget will be taking a 'studentoriented' direction," Brosman said, 'aimed towards increasing services to students that have been cut in the past. It's the most progressive budget I've worked on during my three year involvement with student governmen."

The budget is considerably fatter than last year's — mainly because of a $350,000 windfall which came S G 's way when the university Health Fee Committee agreed to take a first step toward cancelling S G 's contributions to the Health Center The committee's recommendation has not yet been approved by Sliger or the Board of Cinny Foat, past president of California's National Organization for Women, will be on campus today speaking on women's role in the justice system and her own experiences in the U.S. Courts.

Foat was recently the focus of media attention when she was tried for the 1965 murder of Argentine businessman, Moises Chavo Foat was brought to trial 18 years after the event on the strength of John Sidote's testimony, Sidote, her ex-husband, was serving a 25-year sentence for violation of parole in an unrelated killing. He was granted immunity for his testimony against Foat. Foat was acquitted Nov. 16, 1983, after defense had destroyed Sidote's credibility by convincing the jury that he was an alcoholic, a criminal and had mentally and physically abused Foat.

Foat speaks at the Law School Lounge today at noon and tonight at 8 at Ruby Diamond Auditorium. Her visit is sponsored by CPE, the Student ACLU, S.C. Executive Lecture Series, and the FSU Women's Center.

Tallahassee man arrested for drugs, resisting arrest

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

A man who ran from pohce during a drug arrest after he was stopped for running a red light inadvertantly surrendered when he came to the police station to report his car was stolen, police said Wednesday.

Earl Edward Thomas, 22, of Tallahassee, was arrested when officers familiar with the escape overheard him reporting the stolen auto Monday, said Tallahassee police spokesman Scott Hunt.

Hunt said Thomas was stopped early Saturday by Officer Ed Smith for running a red light. Smith found 11 bags of cocaine, three bags of marijuana and some cash on the driver's side floorboard, Hunt said.

Thomas boiled. Smith, who was kicked in the head and suffered other injuries during an arrest the day before, was unable to catch Thomas, Hunt said.

Officers with the Vice and Career Criminal Unit of the police department arrested Thomas as he was reporting his car stolen, Hunt said

Another day under the Big Top, here are some entertaining pieces of legislation you should look out for They could change your life

The Thriller-bills First, there's HB 147 which is all about grave robbing. Lots of fun. "Whoever willfully destroys, mutilates, defaces, injures, or removes any tomb monument, gravestone, or other structure designed for a memorial of the dead." gets in a heap of trouble, boy So all you weekend rombies, watch out. This one's sponsoreal by Rep. Metcalf.—the's a clinical psychologist and no doubt she's seen some strange things out of her patients on full moon nights.

Thriller bill two. HB 446 would have anyone dying of AIDS aremated or put in a sealed mausoleum. If you are caught just burying these unfortunates, you get whopped with a second degree misdemeanor. So why not just shoot 'em with silver buillets or drive a stake through their hearts' Precaution pays.

HB 142 is sponsored by Rep. S.1. "Spud." Clements, It., a retired Highway Patrol person but of whom little normally is heard. But this year he's on to a hot issue Colf carts on the highway. How do you know you are in a Capitol? Symbols. You are surrounded by the totems of power. You may be sitting there in the den in front of your Apple screen with your Walkman jammed in your ears but if you want to know where the beef is it's in iconography. Technology is fine but what we respond to is primitive images that emblematically represent what we think we are

The Great Seal of the State of Horsda. They were using seals in ancient Egypt to legitimatize laws. And we're still at it in Tallahassee. Look good at the Seal The old ones (like the pediment frieze on the Old Capitol) show the Indian princess with a banana-bunch bonnet and strangely craggy mountains in the background. Newer ones have given her a nice smooth folksinger hairstyle and replaced the heights with obsessively-orderly orange groves. But she still strews her flowers to aice pun on the name of the state) and the sun still glares on the out of scale palm and the calm sea — is it a rise or a set? But what Florida is that? Where are the condos? Where is Miskey Mouse?

How many Snopeses do you reckon we have in our state government?

Flags are important, too. There are U.S. and Florida flags in the House and the Senate, in the lobbies, our in front, on top of the dome, in the bigger meeting rosons. It's as if the flags are intended to give some mystic stature to the nonsense talked in these places. Some kind of contagious mags.<sup>3</sup> (Should Mickes be on the flag.<sup>3</sup>)

Columns—you have to have columns. They mean power and symmetry and balance. They call up Washington and Athens and the old plantation house places from which the Word was sent down to the masses. Even the new Capitol has columns of a soft—square and ugly. Columns mean lordship, When Flem Snopes becomes ruler of Jefferson in Faulkner's trilogs, he gets him a mansion with the biggest columns in town.

Now how many Snopses do you reckon we have in our state government?

The senate is also saving money because of recent employee cutbacks in the University Union

"We eliminated a lot of unnecessary positions," Brosman and, "and cut back on some salaries that were too high."

Brosman explained that most often, when salaries rise and funds remain the same, services to students are the hardest hit and usually the first to be cut. Under the new budget, S.G. hopes to restore financial support to S.G. agencies cut back last year.

Under the proposed budget, the Women's Center will receive $18,000, compared with last year's allocation of $12,000. The Center for Participant Education will jump from $26,000 to $35,000. The Escort Service will be given $23,000, in comparison with last year's allocation of $17,000 and the Black Student Union will receive $23,000 instead of the $18,000 allocated in last year's budget.

Brosman said several agencies, such as Legal Services, ended up with a surplus of funds under last year's budget and will be cut back so that the extra money can be spent where it is needed most

The Student Government Executive Branch will receive an additional $6,000 to buy a new van. The van will be available to all $ G. registered organizations.

The Student Senate will get an allocation of $43,000 — a jump from last year's $32,000. The senate is planning to use a part of the money to co-finance a bike compound near the Salley. Smith and Kellum dormitories on the west side of campus. The project is also being financed by Inter Residence Hall Council.

The funds that are not immediately allocated to student organizations will be put in the Services and Academics account ourserveto be available to other programs that need additional funding throughout the year.

Under the new budget, $172,000 will be put into a Project Account. The money will remain in this account, Brosman said, unless an agency shows a real need for more support. The interest on the Project Account will be used to sponsor scholarships for FSU students.

"Distribution of scholarship money is in the hands of the administration, but at least we can contribute more than S.G. has been able to in the past," Brusman said.

The budget, if approved, will also implement a new structure for Homecoming activities. Student tickets will be sold to the university for $8 and $5.6, will pick up $5 of the cost, allowing students to purchase tickets for $3, Brosman said. $5.6, would like to combine the Homecoming activities at the Civic Center nest year.

"We really would like to update Homecoming festivities," Brosman said "We'd like to see them achieve the success Gator Growl is known for, we would also like to make the Pow Wow accessible to more students."

GREENHAM COMMON. England—Between 300 and 400 police and batiffs. Wednesday tore down six makeshift camps of women anti-nuclear protesters outside Greenham Common Air Base, exicting some 100 women and arresting 11.

The destruction of the "peace camp" outside the main gate and five smaller camps around the British air base, 50 miles west of London, was a serious blow to the 2 "year old protest against the sting of U.S. built cruise missiles at the base.

Although police and sheriff's bailiffs ripped apart and hauled away the women's flimsy plastic shelters, the women fled to the nearby woods and yowed to continue their protest.

"If there was some possible way fo me to bring them back alive without the press knowing, I would do it because I love all children."

Goode, who once said he would kill "all the children I can get my hands on" if ever released from prison, spoke for most of the hour about his sexual preference for young boys. He carried a list of nine has requests, written on legal-sized yellow paper, that consisted of his wishes to have sex with young boys before he dies.

When asked how he felt about his impending execution, Goode said he was looking forward to the execution being carried out.

"(But) I'm not looking forward to dying," he said.

Goode said he was afraid prison guards or other prisoners might take the law into their own hands and "kill me themselves" if the execution is not carried out. He did not say why he harbored those fears.

Goode, dressed in a yellow I-shirt, blue pants and blue flip-flops, carried a small bundle of papers into the interview including a photograph of child actor Ricky Schroeder. Goode in the past has made statements of a sexual nature about young Schroeder.

He also carried a TV Guide article on missing children that featured Adam Walsh, a Hollywood boy who was abducted and killed in July 1981.

Goode, who said he is a Catholic, also had a card with a picture of Jesus Christ on one side and a prayer on the other. Goode said he believes God understands the crimes has committed and forgives him.

Goode renewed his request for a televised execution, asking reporters in the room to file a law suit so the execution could be on television. Prison officials have desied Goode's request for a televised execution.

"You have cameras in the courtroom. . . Why can't you have the cameras in the death chamber?" Goode asked.

Goode did not seem afraid of his impending execution but said he felt anxiety, "It's difficult for me to show it," he said.

Goode said he had requested a last meal of steak, benecoll, corn on the cob, cauliflower, cole slaw, milk, ice cream, and chocolate-chip cookies.

He ended the interview by saying, "Thank you very much. I'll see you all tomorrow."

Way clear for Louisiana execution

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

ANGOLA, La. — A string of judges from Louisiana to Washington refused Wednesday to block the early Thursday execution of Elmo Patrick Sonnser, who sought to pin two killings on his brother.

A state district judge and the Louisiana Supreme Court both rejected appeals by attorney William Quigley for a stay of execution for Sonnier, scheduled to die by electrocution between midnight and La m. CST Thursday.

Quigley filed a subsequent appeal with U.S. District Judge John Shaw in Opelousas, La. Shaw rejected the appeal, and Quigley immediately went to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Otleans. In a four-page opinion, the appeals panel said if found no legal reason to block the execution

Sonnier's attorneys turned then to the U.S. Supreme Court for a stay, but after only five manutes of deliberation the high court voted 6-2 to reject the plea. Two justices dessented and a third did not participate.

Gov Edwin Edwards studied a request to stop the execution, and a spokeswoman said the string of court refusals placed a heavy responsibility on the state's chief executive.

The fathers of the two Sonnier victims will be official state witnesses at the Louisiana execution.

Sonnier, 35, was sentenced to death for the killings of Loretta Bourque, 18, and David LeBlanc, 16, of New Iberia

Sonnier and his brother, Eddic, abducted the couple from a lovers' lane. Elmo was convected of pulling the trigger and was sentenced to die. Eddie, who was convicted of holding the flashlight for Elmo, is serving a life prison sentence.

Quigley asked for the stay based on information that Eddie now claims he was the triggerman

Quigley said his appeal included several affiducits, "including a letter from his brother to the governor that goes to the determination of who actually did the killing."

Corrections Department Secretary S. Paul Phelps said he interviewed the fathres of the victims, Lloyd LeBlanc and Godfrey Borque, before agreeing to let them watch Sonnier's electrocution.

"They have both sat through the trials and been admonished and counseled by various district attorneys," Phelps said "they are well aware of official standards and temples of worship," he declared

Sonnier would be the third person executed in Louisiana since December after a 22-year hiatus. The state electrocuted Robert Wayne Williams in December and executed Johnny Taylor Jr. Feb. 29.

"But at the same time I also respect very much something that is very typically American and that is, you are innocent until proven guilty." Reagan added. "You're not guilty simply because you've been accused."

"I am not going to take any action in any case for the sake of political expediency," he said

Reagan seemed to grow angry when he was asked about a Congressional Budget Office study showing that his budget reductions and tax cuts had hurt the poor, but that the rich had gained.

"It's probably the most glaring example of political demagoguery that our friends have engaged in," he said.

"You know, as Disraeli once said, there are lies, blankeryblank lies, and statistics," he said

Reagan said that if someone's tax burden is $20, the administration's tax cut means a savings of $5. A tax burden of $2,000 gets $500, he said, "so there's no way the tax program could have benefited someone at one end of the scale and not the other."

He acknowledged that there were some cuts in Aid to Families with Dependent Children. He said 943,000 families were removed from AFDC, "but they were families that had considerable outside earnings, plus their welfare grants."

Asked if this would present a political problem, he said, "I'm concerned about it. It's a political problem if it's believed."

Reagan was asked if the United States lost credibility in officially withdrawing its Marine peace-keeping forces from Lebanon, where 264 Americans died

"We may have lost some with some people, but situations change," he said.

Providing a little history, he added, "We and three of our allies: decided that in an effort to straighten out a situation that was so out of control in Lebanon. to be on hand to help provide stability while the Lebanese create a government."

Gaye's father ruled incompetent for trial

UNITED PRING INTERNATIONAL

LOS ANGELES-A Municipal Court judge Wednesday ordered a psychiatric study for the preacher father of slain soul-singer Marvin Gaye because the lawyer for the elderly man said he is incompetent to stand trial for murder

Judge Michael Tynan, who entered a plea of innocent on behalf of Marvin Gaye Sr., ordered the retired minister held without bail pending completion of the psychiatric report, which is expected to take about three weeks.

"It is my understanding he is clearly incapable of understanding these proceedings and to undertake his own defense," Tynan said, granting defense lawyer Philip Schreiber's request for a psychiatric evaluation

Tynan delayed further court proceedings until April 25, when he said he would set bail at $100,000 tf it is determined Gaye understands the nature of the charges

If the doctor reports Gave is incapable of understanding the legal proceedings, and a judge agrees, the retired minister could be sent to a mental hospital until he is able to

Schreiber, Tynan and Deputy District Attorney Dona Bracke had huddled before holding the brief court session before a roomful of the singer's fans and reporters

Gaye, who is charged with allegedly shooting his Grammy award winning son through the heart Sunday, did not utter a word during the five-minute legal proceeding

He reportedly is being held in a high-security section of the county jail because of alleged death threats.

Schreiber earlier told reporters the singer's father is "a very moral man, who in recent years has become rather frail.

"The thunder is out of the man," he said. "A lot of things will be coming out which will be surprising to the public.

The younger Gaye was shot twice in the chest at his parent's Los Angeles home Sunday afternoon following an argument that began with his father Saturday night, police said. Police said the fight was over an "immaterial letter from an insurance company."

Bracke said the prosecution decided to file the murder count, instead of a lesser charge of manslaughter, because there was a time lapse between a physical altercation between the two men and the shooting

She said Gaye's father got his gun from his bedroom and walked back to where his son was standing.

The first shot, through the heart, killed the entertainer instantly, she said

The singer's father then waited a few moments, stepped forward and fired a second shot from his 38-caliber revolver through the entertainer's left shoulder at such close range, that it left gunshot powder on his son's face,

A chance to see, hear and talk to successful writers'

As befits the arrival of spring in Tallahassee, the printed word will take on a life of its own tonight through Saturday The Florida State University English Department and Writing Program will present a variety of wordsmiths during its annual Spring Festival of Writers. All events are free and open to the public

In its fourth year, the festival has acquired a reputation for bringing to

FSU both promising and highly respected writers. Past festivals have included George Plimpton, Gail Godwin, Reynolds Price and Margaret Atwood. This year's festival features Richard Schechner, Barbara Milton, Ricardo Pau-Llosa, Joyce Johnson, James Laughlin, George Cuomo and Carolyn Forche

"We try to have a mix of genre writers, of editors and publishers and of men and women," said Janet Burroway, ISU English professor and chairwoman of the Spring Festival committee

Although airfares and lectures fees continue to rise, Burroway said, "the university has maintained its commitment to the festival. The result is an exciting group of

John Fenstermaker, chairman of the FSU English Department, emphasized that commitment. While the festival's budget "has expanded only slightly," he said, both the university and the English Department will continue to support the program during these budget-cutting times

"It's a university event and we hope everybody is behind Fenstermaker said "The festival represents a fine mix of fiction writers, poets, publishers and faculty members who will offer jargon-free and informative discussion on writing '

Richard Schechner will open the festival this evening at 8 in 126 Bellamy on the FSU campus. A Professor of Performance Studies at New York University and author Essays in Performance Theory 1970 1976, Schechner's lecture is entitled, "After Shakespeare? Deconstructing the

It should be noted here that this is the only event scheduled in Bellamy. All others will take place in Longmire Lounge," a cory and sedate 19th century room that has no computers in it," Fenstermaker said

On Friday at 2 p.m., Barbara Milton will read from her fiction, which includes stories published in Paris Review and a collection of pieces published by Word Beat Press, under the title A Small Cartoon A resident of New York City, Milton has become something of a local favorite since she won the 1983 Word Beat Press Fiction Book Competition with A Small Cartoon. This collection has received national recognition with favorable reviews in The Village Voice, The Mid American Review and The Bloomsbury Review Regionally, Douglas Fowler, an FSU English professor, gave the book high marks in the current edition of Sun Dog-

"It's a great time to catch her in her career," said Allen Woodman, founder of Word Beat Press and FSU doctoral student in creative writing "Ten years from now, people will say, 'I heard Barbara Milton at Florida State and she was real regular and talked with everybody ""

Woodman described Milton as "an amazing writer who will soon be in demand for jacket blurbs."

The first printing of 500 copies of A Small Cartoon is sold out, and a second edition of 500 "will be gone in a few months," Woodman said

At 4 pm Friday, Ricardo Pau-Llosa will read his poetry. The winner of the 1983 Anhinga Prize for his collection, Sorting Metaphors, Pau-Llosa presently is employed as an independent art critic and as an adjunct professor of 20th century Latin American art at Florida International University. He also is completing a doctorate in English at the University of Florida Rogelio Polesello, a monograph on Argentine artist, will soon be published in simultaneous English and Spanish editions by Ediciones Gaglianone of Buenos Aires.

William Stafford, the judge for the 1983 Anhinga Prize for Poetry competition, wrote of Sorting Metaphors, "The book has variety-observation, humor, vision. This writer should be cherished and encouraged."

Friday evening at 8, Joyce Johnson will read from her work Executive Editor of Dial Press, an imprint of Doubleday Books in New York City, Johnson has published two novels, Come and Join the Dance (under the name Joyce Glassman) and Bad Connections. She recently won the New York Critics Circle Award for her memoir of Jack Kerouac and the Beats, Minor Characters. She has worked in publishing since the 1950s and has edited the works of LeRoi Jones, Judith Rossner and Abbie Hoffman.

At the urging of poet Allen Ginsberg, Kerouac asked Johnson for a date in January, 1957. Thus began a relationship that went on for several years. Johnson met Kerouac at a pivotal point in his writing career, just nine months before the publication of On the Road. Minor Characters recreates these times with Kerouac and other Beats, and charts Johnson's growth as an editor and a writer. Incidentally, Kerouac wrote of Johnson in his novel Desolate Angels, giving her the character name "Alyce Newman."

'The whole Beat Scene had very little to do with the participation of women as artists themselves," Johnson has said "The real communication was going on between the Turn to WRITE, page 13

At 11:30 a.m., Laughlin, founder and editor of New Quections, will discuss the "Autobiography of a Publishing House: New Directions." Laughlin has published the writings of Ezra Pound, Tennessee Williams, lames Agee, Henry Miller, Dylan Thomas and James loyce. He also has brought back into print Gertrude Stein's Three Lives, Nathanael West's Miss Lonelyheuris and Herman Hesse's Siddhartha. His most recent volume of his wn poetry is In Another Country Laughlin has been awarded honorary degrees from Colgate University. Duquesne University and Yale University, among others

At 2 p.m., George Cuomo will give a reading from his fiction, which includes the novels Among Thieves, Pieces from a Small and Family Honor. Cuomo is an English pofessor at the University of Massachusetts and has published articles in California Quarterly, Saturday Review and The Nation. In addition to novels, Cuomo has written plays, poetry and short stories. He received a Bread Loaf Fellowship in 1962, and was a visiting writer in 1978.

A panel discussion "On Using (or Not Using) Experience" will follow Cuomo's reading at 3:30 p.m. Moderated by FSU English professor Sheila Taylor, the panel will consist of Milton, Johnson, Cuomo and Carolyn

The festival will conclude Saturday night at 8 with a poetry reading by Forche, a recipient of the Yale Series of ounger Poets Award for Gathering the Tribes, and of the Lamont Poetry Prise for The Country Between Us Forche has taught at universities in California, Virginia and Arkansas, and has given extensive readings around the country. She worked as a journalist and human rights investigator in El Salvador between 1978 and 1980. She wrote of these experiences in "El Salvador: An Aide Memoire", cover story for the July/August 1981 issue of The American Poetry Review.

"The literary scene is flourishing in Tallahassee," Burroway said. Consequently, she expects about 1,000 people to attend the festival

•FSU English professor Jerome Stern also anticipates a strong turnout because the festival provides "the chance to see and hear and talk to successful writers."

"It's a wonderful old-fashioned pleasure seeing people in real life as opposed to images in films or in television," Stern said.

Why do they run?

What drives someone to for president? Psychologist David Winter says you can tell just by analyzing campaign speeches. And he says Ronald Reagan and Gary Hart are motivated by the same things: power and the desire to achieve The Weylevan University professor says speeches by both men emphasize those themes, while neglecting words associated with love and friendship Walter Mondale, on the other hand, seems to be appealing to a different kind of voter Winter says he hardly ever uses words referring to friendship, achievement or

Though some political scientists pooh-pooh this long-distance psychology, Winter has counted these themes in the speeches of presidents as far back as James Madison. He claims three patterns emerge Power oriented presidents like John Kennedy may be charismatic, but they have a tendency to get the country into confrontations and wars. Achievement oriented presidents like Jimmy Carter get frustrated dealing with Congress And friendship-oriented presidents like Richard Nixon become surly if they feel unloved or insecure

Seminoles split with the Gators

After the first game, of vesterday's double-header with Florida, it looked like Florida State was in for a long day, but the Seminoles bounced back to win the second game 11. 9 and earn a split with the Gators.

In the first game, the Seminoles (32-16) were limited to just three runs on nine hits. The Gators, however, pounded out 11 runs on 14 hits—eight of them for extra bases—off of three FSU pitchers.

Starter Doug Little (6.4) gave up eight runs on 12 hits over 6.1 innings. For Florida. (24-10), reliever Jeff Fischer (3.0) picked up the win by hurling one hit ball over the last 4.1 innings.

"Florida has a good balklub," Seminole head coach Mike Martin said. "I can see how they are leading their division."

Mike Loynd came on in relief of starter Doug Treadway in the fifth inning and picked up the win. Loynd (7-2) allowed three runs on three hits over three innings.

FSU jumped on Florida starter Stan Fascher for four runs in the first inning First baseman Jimmy Jones provided the inning's big blast for the Seminoles when he sent a Fascher pitch deep over the right field fence for a three-run homer.

But Florida bounced back and scored four runs off of Treadway in the second. Scott Ruskin doubled off of the rightfield wall and later scored on a Treadway wild pitch. Then, with one out, first baseman Brad Dantzler hit a two-run homer to rightfield. The next batter up for the Gators, second baseman Brace Crabbe, added a solo shot.

McMurtry, a 24 year old righthander who was National League Rookie of the Year in 1983 when he was 15.9, was outstanding in his first start of 1984 Wednesday night when he pitched 7.2.3 innings of shutout ball in the Atlania Braves 4-0 victory over the defending National League champion Philadelphia Phillies

McMurtry, who scattered four singles and was aided by three double plays through the first seven innings, loaded the bases on two hits and a walk in the eighth, but Steve Bedrosian came on and struck out Mike Schmidt to end the threat and allowed only a walk in the minth.

On offense for the Braves, Claudell Washington led off the first inning with a home run and Chris Chamblass led off the econd the same way against 1983 Cy Young winner John Denny, who had been unbeaten in seven previous decisions against the Braves

Florida State tailback Billy Allen looks for an opening in 1981's Garnet and Gold Game. Allen, a tailback for his first three years at FSU. is now trying to make it as a safety on defense. Known as a fumbler and stuck in a position blessed with much talent, Allen hopes saftey will be his permanent position. Can he make it?

Florida Flambeau/Bob O'Lary

Billy Allen: finding a home

After three years and a bit of frustration, Billy Allen may have finally found a home

And not a moment too soon. A 25-year old senior, Allen was beginning to wonder what it would take to help the Florida State football team in a way that would make him

But now, the tailback, who a season ago spent most of his time in head coach Bobby Bowden's doghouse, now has a second chance: playing strong safety on defense Though it is a position he is familiar with from his high school days in Cleveland, Ohio, it is not the tailback position that he had wanted to star at

A "utflity man," as he likes to phrase it, Allen played defensive back, punter, placekicker and wide receiver in high school. At 5'11" and 150 pounds, he was not exactly running back material, nor a widely sought-after recruit So Allen decided to skip college and get out of his tough neighborhood by joining the Air Force

"Basically, I wanted to find out what it was like to work, because I was pretty sheltered by my parents," Allen said. "I wanted to get away from the city, and a lot of friends were dying. It was a rough town It was like seeing a fight or seeing someone get killed was nothing. I miss my family, but I don't miss the neighborhood "

So Allen enlisted in the Air Force, and immediately gained 27 pounds and filled out his frame in basic training. He also kept up his football playing, and finally started playing running back

After he got assigned to the Royal Air Force Lakenheath station in England, he earned a reputation as an exciting tailback, nabbing most valuable player honors overseas. Bowden heard about Allen while travelling to Europe on a coaching clinic, and talked him into enrolling at FSU when he finished his tour of duty in 1981

By the time Allen did get to FSU, the media had learned of his service exploits and gave him a lot of preseason hype he really wasn't ready for. "When I first arrived here it was something else, because I really didn't expect the publicity I received," Allen said. "The people treated me well, but the coaches didn't expect that much from me. But yeah, I was a little nervous

the reality of being an old man in comparison to the rest of his freshman class. While he was 22, most of the freshmen were either 17 or 18 "Yeah, it was weird at first," Allen admitted "All these young kids, and here I was, having already gone out in the world and done

"They called me the 'Old Man ' In the service, I was the young kid on the block But now, it was backwards

Nevertheless, Allen was able to overcome the hype and "old age" to impress coaches with his play and was listed with the second unit going into the fall

In the season opener against Louisville, Allen got his chance. Rotating with starter Ricky Williams, Allen ripped off a thrilling 50-yard touchdown scamper in the fourth quarter. The Seminoles went on to win 17 0. and Bowden hinted that Allen would start the following week

At that point, things seemed to be going fine for Allen Then, the walls came down Despite gaining 91 yards on 22 carries against Memphis State the following week, Allen had two fumbles, including a crucial one on the 12 yard line that killed a big ESU

The memory is not a pleasant one for him, because Allen honestly felt that that first touchdown run was the shape of things to come for him. "Oh, man, heck yeah! It felt great," Allen said, thinking back "It was my first touchdown in my first game as a Seminole. I just said to myself, "Hey, wow, now maybe I can show them that I can play "

'Of course, then things kind of went downhill

Indeed, they did Allen developed a reputation for fumbling in 1981 that he really didn't deserve. The penchant was understandable to him, at least. "I was just getting used to a new system," he said. "I had never been hit that hard in the service, And, the weather conditions were bad, too '

Either way, those two games of 89 and 91 yards proved to be the only moments in the sun for Allen in 1981, but for more reasons than just the fumbling. The continued development of Williams, plus the emergence of a freshman named Greg Allen

After the first game, of vesterday's double-header with Florida, it looked like Florida State was in for a long day, but the Seminoles bounced back to win the second game 11-9 and earn a split with the Gators.

In the first game, the Seminoles (12.16) were limited to just three runs on nine hits. The Gators, however, pounded out 11 runs on 14 hits—eight of them for extra bases—off of three FSU pitchers.

Starter Doug Little (6.4) gave up eight runs on 12 hits over 6.1 innings. For Florida (24.10), reliever Jeff Fischer (1.0) picked up the win by hurling one hit ball over the last 4.1 innings.

"Florida has a good ballclub," Seminole head coach Mike Martin said. "I can see how they are leading their division."

however

Mike Loynd came on in relief of starter Doug Treadway in the fifth inning and picked up the win. Loynd (7.2) allowed three runs on three hits over three innings.

FSU jumped on Florida starter Stan Fascher for four runs in the first inning. First baseman Jimmy Jones provided the inning's big blast for the Serninoles when he sent a Fascher pitch deep over the right field fence for a three-run homer.

But Florida bounced back and scored four runs off of Treadway in the second. Scott Ruskin doubled off of the rightfield wall and later scored on a Treadway wild pitch. Then, with one out, first baseman Brad Dantzler hit a two-run homer to rightfield. The next batter up for the Gators, second baseman Bruce Crabbe, added a solo shot.

Braves beat Phillies

ATLANTA - It looks like Craig McMurtry is picking up tight where he left off

McMuttry, a 24 year old righthander who was National League Rookie of the Year in 1983 when he was 15-9, was outstanding in his first start of 1984 Wednesday night when he pitched 2-2-3 innings of shutout ball in the Atlanta Braves 4-0 sectory over the defending National League champion Philadelphia Phillies

McMurtry, who scattered four singles and was aided by three double plays through the first seven innings, loaded the bases on two hits and a walk in the eighth, but steve Bedrosian came on and strick out Mike Schmidt to end the threat and allowed only a walk in the minth.

On offense for the Braves, Claudell Washington led off the first inning with a home run and Chris Chambliss led off the second the same way against 1983 Cy Young winner John Denny, who had been unbeaten in seven previous decisions against the Braves.

Florida State tailback Billy Allen looks for an opening in 1981's Garnet and Gold Game. Allen, a tailback for his first three years at FSU. is now trying to make it as a safety on defense. Known as a fumbler and stuck in a position blessed with much talent. Allen hopes saftey will be his permanent position. Can he make it?

Florida Flambeau Bob O'Lary

Billy Allen: finding a home

After three years and a bit of frustration, Billy Allen may have finally found a home

And not a moment too soon. A 25-yearold senior. Allen was beginning to wonder what it would take to help the Florida State football team in a way that would make him

But now, the tailback, who a season ago spent most of his time in head coach Bobby Bowden's doghouse, now has a second chance: playing strong safety on defense Though it is a position he is familiar with from his high school days in Cleveland, Ohio, it is not the tailback position that he had wanted to star at

A "utility man," as he likes to phrase it. Allen played defensive back, punter, placekicker and wide receiver in high school. At 5'11" and 150 pounds, he was not exactly running back material, nor a widely sought-after recruit. So Allen decided to skip college and get out of his tough neighborhood by joining the Air Force

"Basically, I wanted to find out what it was like to work, because I was pretty sheltered by my parents," Allen said. "I wanted to get away from the city, and a lot of friends were dying. It was a rough town It was like seeing a fight or seeing someone get killed was nothing. I miss my family, but I don't miss the neighborhood."

So Allen enlisted in the Air Force, and immediately gained 27 pounds and filled out his frame in basic training. He also kept up his football playing, and finally started playing running back.

After he got assigned to the Royal Air Force Lakenheath station in England, he earned a reputation as an exciting tailback, nabbing most valuable player honors overseas. Bowden heard about Allen while travelling to Europe on a coaching clinic, and talked him into enrolling at FSU when he finished his tour of duty in 1981.

By the time Allen did get to FSU, the media had learned of his service exploits and gave him a lot of preseason hype he really wasn't ready for. "When I first arrived here it was something else, because I really didn't expect the publicity I received," Allen said. "The people treated me well, but the coaches didn't expect that , much from me. But yeah, I was a little

the reality of being an old man in comparison to the rest of his freshman class While he was 22, most of the freshmen were either 17 or 18 "Yeah, it was weird at first," Allen admitted "All these young kids, and here I was, having already gone out in the world and done things.

"They called me the 'Old Man ' In the service, I was the young kid on the block But now it was backwards

Nevertheless. Allen was able to overcome the hype and "old age" to impress coaches with his play and was listed with the second unit going into the fall

In the season opener against Louisville, Allen got his chance. Rotating with starter Ricky Williams, Allen ripped off a thrilling 50 yard touchdown scamper in the fourth quarter. The Seminoles went on to win 17-0, and Bowden hinted that Allen would start the following week

At that point, things seemed to be going fine for Allen. Then, the walls came down Despite gaining 91 yards on 22 carries against Memphis State the following week, Allen had two fumbles, including a crucial one on the 12 yard line that killed a big FSU

The memory is not a pleasant one for him, because Allen honestly felt that that first touchdown run was the shape of things to come for him. "Oh, man, beck yeah! It felt great," Allen said, thinking back. "It was my first touchdown in my first game as a Semmole I just said to myself, "Hey, wow, now maybe I can show them that I can play."

"Of course, then things kind of went downhill."

Indeed, they did Allen developed a reputation for fumbling in 1981 that he really didn't deserve. The penchant was understandable to him, at least. "I was just getting used to a new system," he said 'I had never been hit that hard in the service, And, the weather conditions were bad, too."

Either way, those two games of 89 and 91 yards proved to be the only moments in the sun for Allen in 1981, but for more reasons than just the fumbling. The continued development of Williams, plus the emergence of a freshman named Greg Allen

Florida State's shortstop Jody Reed falls over an unidentified Florida player in the * first game of yesterday's double-header. The Gator was thrown out on the play, but the end result proved different as Florida crushed FSU 11.3. The second game was another story, as FSU came back and won it 11-9 Florida Flambeau Bob O'Lary

The game remained 5-4 until the fourth inning, when Florida State scored two runs on one hit. The Gators, who had played errorless ball in the first game, committed three errors in the inning.

The Gators came back and scored three runs on three hits in the fifth inning to tie the game, 7-7

It was catcher Vince Insogna's two-run homer over the rightfield fence that put Florida State ahead for good

"I was abused the first time I came up," Insogna said. "I was looking to hit the ball hard. I just fortunately made contact with the ball and it went out "

The Gators added two runs in the eighth, but could pull no closer to the Seminoles

In 1982, Greg Allen was the running back of the future for the Seminoles, and Billy's role lessened further. In 1981, for example, he gained 222 yards on 43 attempts. In 1982, mostly backing up Greg Allen, Billy gained 119 yards on 29 yards on only 29 attempts. Obviously, Billy Allen was being phased out.

In the spring of 1983, however, Allen asked to be switched to defensive back, his old high school position. In the early going, he impressed coaches, and it seemed like he would get his chance to play. But Bowden said the running back area needed depth, and Allen was shifted back.

That, of course, was before the rise of Rosey Snipes, who was, tronically enough. Allen's roommate in the fall. Snipes impressed coaches so much with his play that he and Greg Allen split time at tailback. Once again, Billy Allen faded into the back ground, relegated to returning kick offs.

In the fourth game of the season, however, Allen once again had a chance to redeem himself. With tailbacks Greg Allen, Supes and Darrin Holloman all hurt, Allen was put in against Auburn in a game that Bowden desperately wanted to win.

Simply not having a good day. Allen could only muster 21 yards on five carries, and missed holes all day long as the Seminoles lost a hearthreaker, 27-24. Obviously furnous after the game, Bowden made comments that pointed to Allen's running as one of the reasons for the 'Noles' loss. Realizing he made the comments in a fit. Bowden later apologized to Allen.

Allen wasn't quite sure what to make of the situation that day, and admits he didn't know what the fuss was all about. "I don't know. I didn't even understand what was going on until people started telling me what he said (in the post game interview). Then he came up to me later and apologized."

After the Auburn game, Allen was not to be heard from again at tailback, but continued to run back keckoffs. It was not much, but Allen was philosophical. "It's my job to do whatever it takes to win," be said. "It wasn't fun, but that's adversity, and people learn from adversity. If I had to do it all over again, though, I would've wanted to play defense instead of offense."

Which is what he is doing now, and from everybody says, he just may make it. Bowden, who admits he doesn't like what happened to Allen, is pulling for him. "I'd be upset too if it had happened to me." Bowden said. "I think he can make it. He sure deserves it."

According to defensive coordinator Mickey Andrews, Allen's move to safety was the best move for everybody. "We felt he could make a greater contribution on defense than on offense, and we need help there," Andrews said.

Right now, Allen is listed behind converted linebacker Prince Matt at strong safety, but the battle is a close one. "We've been pleased with the progress he's made there," Andrews said. "He has the tools to be a fine strong safety Billy wants so much to be a contributor to the team."

That is, perhaps, the most accurate statement a man can make about Allen, who has wanted so much to be of help to his team. "I'm about ready to do what it takes to play defense," he said adamantly, "because I've sat on the bench for three years. I just wanna play,"

How about starting, Billy? "Yeah, it would be beautiful," he says apparently overcome by the thought. "At least to finally play my senior year...yeah, it would be beautiful."

Arthur Goode executed in electric chair

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

STARKE—Arthur Frederick Goode III, one of Florida's most notorious child molestors, died Thursday in the state's electric chair with tears in his eyes and an apology for the set murders of two boys.

As a crowd of 50 people watched—eight of them crammed into the death chamber not more than 5 feet from the oak electric chair—Goode became the 18th man executed in the United States since the death penalty was lifted in 1976, and the fourth in Florida—the most in any state.

Goode, who said he would "kill as many kids as I can get my hands on" if set free, died less than six hours after Elmo Patrick Sonnier, 35, was electrocuted at Angola prison in Louisiana.

The executions marked the first time since the Supreme Court dropped its ban on the death penalty in 1976 that two men have been executed on the same day. It also marked the third execution in the Sunshine State since Nov. 30, 1983.

Goode killed 9-year-old Jason Verdow of Cape Coral, Fla., after escaping from a mental hospital in Spring Grove, Md., and later killed 11 year-old Kenneth Dawson in Falls Church, Va. He was sentenced to life in prison in the Virginia slaying.

Goode, who told newsmen Wednesday he wanted to satisfy his pedophilic appetite by having sex with young boys, repented in his final tearful seconds before he was executed by an unidentified executioner, hired through a newspaper ad

Gay Awareness Week

BY MICHAEL MOLINE

A little over ten years ago, a doctor in the Florida State University Health Center's counseling program noticed that more and more of his clients were coming to him with the same problem

They were gay, and they didn't know what to do about it. Like many of the estimated 20 million gay Americans, they did not know how to fit into a society that, at its most charitable, considered them mentally ill.

At about that same time, Lucy Kizirian, then a doctoral student in Home and Family Life, was researching the counseling needs of gay men and women. The doctor, Mike Schwartz, called Kizirian with a suggestion why not establish a program specifically designed to help gay students?

They called it the Gay Peer Counseling Service. It was to be operated by students, with the aid of professional counselors from the Student Counseling Center. Since its first meeting in the Fall of 1974, the service has gone through a series of name changes as its services expanded. This semester, the name was changed from Gay Peer Volunteers to the Gay Lesbian Support Services, and to celebrate, the group is sponsoring a week-long series of lectures, discussions and parties.

Kizirian, now a fulltime member of the health center staff, an adjunct professor in the Home and Family Life Department and psychological consultant to the support service, spoke Thursday about the program's history and plans for Gay Awareness Week.

"It's meant to be educational and celebrative," she said. "The whole purpose is to celebrate the fact that we have provided the service and helped people in the gay community feel good about themselves."

Things aren't as bad as it used to be, but gays still have their share of problems. Foremost is the threat posed by "homophobia"—a hatred and fear of homosexuality that sometimes borders on psychosis.

"(Gays) constantly face the potential for rejection by people around them or public ridicule—people making jokes not knowing they're gay or knowing

Ron to women: I'm your friend

1 NITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

NEW YORK—President Reagan, denouncing sex discrimination as "just as great an exil" as racial or religious bias, embraced the goal of equality for women Thursday while courting three of New York's largest voting groups

Reagan spent more than nine hours in rain-soaked Manhattan, touching base with Jews and Roman Catholics and trying to bridge the "gender gap" during a visit billed as non-political by the White House

Reagan went on the offensive before a conference of business ownership by women

"Each woman must have the freedom to choose her path for herself, and I'm committed to just that," the 73-year-old Republican president said in his prepared remarks.

"The simple truth," he added, "is I've been frustrated by the perception that has been created about my supposed lack of interest in the welfare of women."

He took credit for more than a dozen actions to improve economic opportunities for women and eliminate legal discrimination and objected to charges that he has an antiquated view of the sexes.

"When certain people for political reasons claim that I don't understand the modern woman, I'm tempted to say, 'Then how come I have two very independent daughters?" Reagan asked

The president's elder daughter, Maureen, has been active in politics and his younger daughter, Patti, is an actress

After his speech, Reagan arranged to visit a day-care center serving 250 black, Hispanic and other children. Later, he was scheduled to have a private meeting with Jewish leaders and to attend a dinner of the New York State Federation of Catholic School Parents in the company of Archbishop John O'Connor, who helped tone a church document on nuclear weapons that had concerned the administration.

Women's groups say 32 states now provide child care service to fewer children than in 1981 because of cutbacks in federal aid under Reagan.

But his message, central to his re-election campaign, was that economic recovery has done more than "all the promises made in the history of Washington, D.C.," to expand opportunities for everyone.

Despite his opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment and charges of lax enforcement of anti-discrimination laws, Reagan said he is committed to equal opportunity.

Among the actions he cited was appointment of a commission on women's business ownership. Although he announced the panel last June 22, Reagan met with the group for the first time last Friday

Reagan said he has named more than 1,400 women to top government jobs, taken steps to remove discriminatory references from federal laws and regulations and been more aggressive in bringing discrimination cases against employers than Jimmy Carter.

He announced the appointment of Rosemary Collyer as the first woman general counsel of the NLRB. She succeeds William Lubbers, now chairman of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission.

The trip illustrated the fine line separating election-year presidential business from the business of politics. White House officials said the visit was official, and thus paid for by taxpayers, because Reagan was out to promote specific programs of his administration and not his candidacy. "He is not asking for votes," said presidential spokesman Larry Speakes.

Learning about the law

BY FILEEN DRENNEN

Ginny Foat might not have known much about the legal system 10 years ago. But after seeing the inside of county jails in California and Louisiana, being tried for and found innocent of the murder of Argentine businessman Moises Chayo, she knows enough to feel like she's already had two years of law school.

And, she told a group at Florida State's Law School Thursday, she doesn't necessarily like what she's learned.

"You get as much justice in this country as you're prepared to pay for," said Foat

Foat's firsthand education in the criminal justice system began when her ex-busband John Sidote — an abusive and schizophrenic alcoholic who sometimes beat her and had already served four years in California's Chino prison for involuntary manslaughter — walked into an Albany, N. Y. police station with a bad case of the DTs to confess murders he said he had committed in the mid-'60s. And, he said, his wife at the time — Foat — had helped

There was an investigation, but Goat was cleared. But it didn't end there

In 1983, Foat found herself facing those same charges again. A rival in California's National Organization for Women – Shelley Mandell – instigated a security check that turned up the 1977 warrant. Exactly how she did so still haffles Foat, and she has recently filed a civil lawsuit against Mandell in an effort to solve some of the mysteries.

The result of it all was that Foat was left with a $225,000 leval bill $80,000 of which she still owes — and a pragmatic view of the legal system

What does work, she said is the jury system. The NX man, six woman jury that sat during her trial was not only fair to her, but smarter than prosecutors probably bargained on, she said.

The prosecutor "tried her as a woman," said Foat, never once asking her if she had in fact killed this man on this day. Instead, she said, he chose to illustrate how her past "life style" made her a woman capable of murder

Her belief in abortion for one:

killing fetuses, how far could she be from killing a grown man? And the kind of cold hearted woman who could put her child up for adoption ("That was about all you could do in the '60s," said Foat) might well be capable of murder, argued the prosecutor. And to cap it all off, said Foat, he tried to convice the jury that Foat — who had worked as a waitress and a bartender for a while — had spent a considerable amount of time around "those kind of people" and everyone knows where that leads. Right?

Wrong, said the jury. One member of the jury said her husbane had worked as a barker on Bourbon Street and another said her husband worked his way through school as a bartender. They knew exactly what "those kinds of people" were like — only it didn't have much to do with what the prosecutor wanted them to think.

Foat has decided to put her practical knowledge of the law to work by enrolling in law school at the University of California at Berkley for a formal education.

"I have a couple of things in my favor," she said. "I'm a woman, I'm 43, and in California you get extra points for a colorful background."

Some agencies get more money — pending Sliger's approval

BY MICHELLE GOULD

Although he's a little worried about administration reaction to the budget passed last night by the student senate, Florida State University Student Senate President Ed Brosman likes the new "student-oriented" budget.

And so do some of the student government-funded groups — like the Center for Participant Education, the Black Student Union and the FSU Women's Center — which stand to gain from the $330,000 windfall student government has to divvy up as a result of getting out of the business of funding the health center with student activity fees.

Previously, the Health Center, Intercollegiate Athletics and the University Union were "rubber stamp" programs and they didn't leave much money for student organizations, according to Brosman.

"We got this pie and we cut out their (Health Center, ICA and University Union) pieces and what ever was left was split between the rest," said Brosman. "They got pretty much the crumbs."

But this year, as a result of legislation separate athletic, health, and activities fees from general tuition, a university committee was able to approve a health fee increase, and radically reduce the money from A&S fees that student government was automatically expected to give to the health center.

Brosman feels there will be lengthy feedback from FSU administration about the budget, but it will pass. "I don't think it's what the administration wants, but I think it's what the students want and I'd be disappointed if they didn't go along with what the students want," said Brosman.

"The budget is just a whole new direction," said Brosman, "Instead of keeping on the same of dirt road, we switched to a new highway."

FSU Vice-president for Student Affairs Bob Leach couldn't be reached for comment.

Brosman isn't the only one pleased with the new budget "We always like money," said Herb Andrews, President of Black Student Union — one of the organizations which received a budget increase. It's doubtful many student sovernment-funded groups would disagree with Andrews.

The Women's Center didn't, "I was very surprised and very pleased when I heard we had been allocated the full amount," said Maryann Leon, the center's director. One of Leon's goals when she took office a year ago was regain ang the 22 percent cut the center suffered last year, and she did.

The Women's Center will receive $18,000 compared to the $12,000 budgeted last year.

"I think they've (SG) finally realized that we couldn't go on functioning on peanuts," said Leon, "We did work very, very hard this past year and the hard work finally paid off,"

The center will use the increase to bring in big name speakers, to publish rape awareness booklets and to begin a six-to eight-week program on assertiveness.

The Center for Participant Education also reaped the benefits of the large windfall

"We're pleased that nothing got cut," said Steve Also, a work study student with CPE the last three years. Also stressed that while this year's increased funds are welcome they still don't bring CPE's budget back to the 1982-83 level. In 1982, CPE's budget was $40,000, but last year student government only allocated $27,000 for CPE.

This year CPE received $36,000 but Also points out that the $9,000 increase is still well below the 1982 level

"Yes, it is an increase from last year but it has to be looked at in the context of what last year's senate did," said Also. "What happened last year could only be described as catastrophic."

This year part of CPE's money must pay for the salaries of woodshop and pottery shop teachers and the upkeep of the shops. Previously, the two shops were allocated funds separately by student government. Once those expenses are met — Also estimates they'll total $4,000 — CPE will actually have $32,000 to spend on programs rather than $36,000.

Also said the money won't change CPE's programs noticeably, but will improve each a little bit.

"The appearance of an overwhelming increase is just that — and appearance," said Also.

The Black Student Union is optimistic about the increase. "We're basically statisfied with what we got. In the past, we had felt we were being out unfairly. This year it looks as if it has turned around," said Andrews, who took office in March.

The BSU, which received a $5,000 increase over last year's $18,000, plans to use the extra funds for recruitment and retention of black students. Since 1980, Andrews says FSU has lost $00 black students.

"They're not failing out because of bad grades. They're failing out because of maladjustments and financial aid problems," said Andrews.

The BSU will use the money to bring in black speakers, bands, and to publish its newspaper, B Issue Awareness. By increasing black awareness around the campus, Andrews said, BSU hopes to increase black enrollment and keep more black students at FSU until graduation.

CPE, the Women's Center and BSU are all waiting for the final stamp of approval — from FSU's President Bernie Sliger

If Sliger vetoes the SG budget, these organizations may still be feeding on crumbs.

E.O.Wilson To Lecture Here

Pulitzer Prize-winning author E.O. Wilson, the Harvard biologist who put genes on the cultural map, will deliver a series of free public lectures on campus April 9-11.

One of the most controversial and provocative scientific thinkers of recent times, Dr. Wilson ignited the scientific community in 1975 with the book "Sociobiology: The New Synthesis," in which he claimed that biology is the key to human behavior—that our culture is in our genes.

Wilson continued this theme in his next book, "On Human Nature," which explored the genetic basis of aggression, sex, altruism and religion — and won him the Pulitzer Prize in 1979.

In the 1981 "Genes, Mind, and Culture," written with physicist Charles J. Lumsden, Wilson extended the theory of evolution and natural selection to the study of culture. Culture, the authors asserted, is shaped by instincts, while instincts are altered by cultural innovations.

According to a description in "Current Biography," Wilson is "an enthusiastic and unabashed talker." A 1978 apperarance on the "Dick Cavett Show" revealed him to be a scientist who could make his ideas vivid and compelling to non-scientists.

Wilson will deliver three public lectures in Moore Auditorium on the Florida State campus: "Introduction to Sociobiology"— 3 p.m. April 9: "Relation to Cultural and Genetic Evolution"—3 p.m. April 10; and "The Social Insects"—3 p.m. April 11.

Hughes Lecture Re-Set

Robert Hughes, senior art critic of Time Magazine, lectures on modern art Monday April 9, at 8 p.m. in the Mainstage Theatre, FSU Fine Arts Building. It is free and open to the public.

This lecture, originally scheduled March 29 as part of the Fine Arts Festival, had to be postponed when Hughes could not fly output of New York City because of bad weather.

Why?

Gov. Bob Graham's rationale for supporting the death penalty is that if is needed to send a message to those who would deprive others of life. If that's true, we're not sure what Graham would make of the message sent by the execution early Thursday of Arthur Goode.

Goode had been convicted of the sex slaying of a nine year-old boy in Cape Coral. It was not Goode's first offense—he was also convicted of killing an 11-year-old boy in Virginia. He showed no remorse for those crimes until just moments before he was strapped into the electric chair and executed.

But then, there's little if any evidence to suggest Goode realized the gravity of his offense — or even of his situation. That's notwith-tanding the opinion of the three psychiatrists, appointed by Graham, who spent 30 whole minutes with Goode before pronouncing him sane enough to be killed

Simply put, Goode has been insane nearly his entire life. According to sources at the Florida Clearinghouse on Criminal Justice, who have seen copies of his psychological reports, Goode had been in and out of mental hospitals since he was three years old. Reporters who took part in Goode's final press conference Wednesday afternoon agreed Goode was a very sick man. Because of his illness, he was a very dangerous man.

Florida law makes provision for people like Goode, although as his case shows, those provisions do not always work. The law says people are not legally responsible for crimes they commit while insane, and that the insane shall not be executed. It was that second provision which required the appointment of the three psychiatrists who certified Goode as sane. Insantity, the law recognizes, is an illness. Because the insane cannot control their behavior. Laws mean nothing to them. Notions of "deterrence" mean nothing to them. And just as the law and the lives of those two children meant nothing to Goode, his death will mean nothing to the people like him out there on the streets.

Then what purpose will his death serve? Why did he have to die?

Once again, the system has come down most heavily on the weakest among us — the poor, the sick, the powerless.

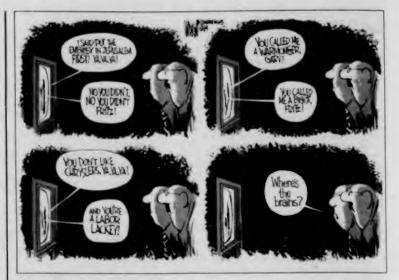

The only purpose Goode's death serves is to make the brutality of systems that much more obvious.

This letter is to call the attention to the situation of a religious minority in Iran. The fundamentalist Moslem government of Iran is engaged in a Holy War against the B'ahai. Hundreds had been executed, including three teen-aged girls, for committing the "crime" of teaching the B'ahai faith to children of 'ahai families. The reason the fundamentalist government of Iran is persecuting this religious group is because they have such "heretical" beliefs as equality of men and women and rejecting violence and war as a means of preaching the Iaith.

If we do not raise our voices against such blatant disregard for human rights and let a people be massacred because of their pacifist views, we should not consider ourselves human beings and join the beasts who blaspheme the name of God (or Allah) when they use it as a pretext to kill another juman being.

I am writing to you concerning the "Greek" morons who like to vandalize our campus with their fraternity's symbols—namely the ones who put their symbols on every single car in the dust bowl (including mine). I won't give their name because it would give them publicity and bring an ignorant smile to every face of those responsible.

In retaliation for what they have done to my car and many other cars of innocent people, I wish these simple things upon them:

- That their cans of spray paint overheat and explode, ruining their Playbox magazine collections.
- That their 1.0 grade point average goes down at the end of the semester;
- That their television breaks, so they can no longer watch The A Team and Three's Company regims.
- That Orson Welles, Jack Webb and Wink Martindale crash their next party.

I've got to close now because I have to go clean off my car. Have a nice day!

Congratulations to Peter Mantle for accurately depicting the irresponsible and destructive spirit of many. Florida. State. University fraternal organizations in his April 3 letter entitled "Frat Violence." Mr. Mantle raised a number of provocative questions about FSU's Greek system, perhaps the most notable of which is the university administration's apparent willingness to tolerate fraternities' continued disrespect of others' personal property.

As a case in point, my car was one of hundreds recently caught in an indiscriminant dragnet of vandalism sponsored by the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraterinty. For reasons still unspecified, the "Sig Eps" saw fit to emblazon with a wax paste compound their Greek initials on the windshields of nearly every campus-parked car. Imagine my vexation when repeated complaints to various FSU authorities were dismissed as being "over-reactionary" and "pedantic." I can only hope that these same university leaders perceive their anger as "over-reactionary" when I adorn their vehicles with my personal initials shortly after graduation.

Demonstrators gather at Capitol

BY EILEEN DRENNEN

As the State of Florida prepared to execute Arthur Goode for his murder of a nine-year-old boy, death penalty opponents gathered around the Great Seal of Florida Thursday morning to protest the taking of his life in their

Thirty demonstrators stood silently in the Capitol rotunda minutes before Goode was electrocuted. Their protest was peaceful-they displayed little of the anger seen at past protests. A small crowd-some pro, some anti-gathered at the prison in Starke as well.

We pray for a poor, disturbed, unhappy man: Freddy Goode," said Rev. Bruce Robertson of First Presbyterian Church. "We hope that in these the waning (moments) of his life some calm may descend upon him."

Many of the protesters said they felt that Goode deserved a stay of execution because he was insane, but a three-member panel of psychiatrists appointed by Gov. Graham had found Goode competent enough to be executed.

The governor was satisfied, said General Counsel Syd McKenzie, "that Mr. Goode understood the crime and his

"We pray, O God, for some way to change the hearts and minds of those who thirst for retribution," Robertson said. Members of the crowd stood silent. They also recited prayers, sang hymns and read passages from the Bible.

McKenzie, said his office has received fewer calls in protest each time a prisoner has been executed in Florida. But Rev. Joe Ingle, director of the Southern Coalition on Jails and Prisons and one of the early morning protestors, disagreed.

"There were vigils held all over the south last night," Ingle said Thursday. Many death penalty opponents don't necessarily take part in the protests, he said.

"There's a surprising number of people against the death penalty in this country," said Ingle. "And you don't see it in polls. You see it in jury selection—the number of people who refuse to sit on juries because they admit they would not recommend a person be executed for a crime

As the hour of Goode's execution passed with no official word of his death, a woman in the crowd spoke up

"Lord of the Universe, we ask your blessing and mercy for Freddy Goode-that for the first time in his life he may be at peace. We ask your mercy and blessing for ourselves, to work for what is right, not what is easy

The demonstrators dispersed, some going off to work or school, others heading down to the Capitol cafeteria for

One or two stayed around to answer reporters' questions. Is the death penalty becoming routine in Florida? Will Goode's death deter others who might contemplate similar

"(Death) was routine 40 years ago in Nazi Germany," said Jimmy Lohman, an FSU law student who works for the Florida Clearinghouse on Criminal Justice "I don't think it could ever become routine here."

'It's true that those (found guilty of) sexual battery in our society are ill regarded," said Budd Bell, director Clearinghouse on Human Services. "But that doesn't mean the extermination of a tragically ill young man is going to deter sexual battery."

"I'm very upset," the 30-year-old condemned man said in the death chamber, his voice quavering and tears welling in his eyes "I don't know what to say, really."

'I want to apologize to my parents," he said, choking back more tears. "I have remorse for the two boys I murdered It's difficult for me to show it."

A few minutes later, a black gag sealed off his mouth and a hood was dropped over his head. Then, a charge of 2,000 volts was sent into his body for more than a minute

Goode's body quickly went rigid, his fists clenched and his pale white skin gradually turned ashen. His body tensed again a minute after the first charge but relaxed 30 seconds later. He was pronounced dead six minutes later.

The Rev. Joseph Maniangat, who witnessed the execution, made the sign of the cross on his own chest and again toward Goode as doctors checked the condemned man for any signs

Maniangat, who gave Goode his last communion a few hours earlier, said "he kept watching television. I think he was expecting a stay or something."

But as the time of execution drew nearer, the priest said, "Goode was facing the reality. He was willing to die. He was prepared '

"You should try it. It's like eating ice cream," he told

Goode was awakened shortly after 4:30 a.m. EST and given a last meal of steak, buttered vegetables, milk, a half gallon of ice cream and a dozen chocolate chip cookies.

In a muddy field outside the lime-green prison, about 25 death penalty protesters stood around a plywood coffin and seven supporters of capital punishment displayed signs such as "good riddance."

At the State Capitol in Tallahaseee, Gov. Bob Graham said: "I believe we've now reached the point where the rights of the public will be respected.

"I believe the message is sent every time there is an execution that Florida is serious about life and every time they take a life they can prepare to sacrifice their own," he

Convicted murderer wins appeal

The Florida Supreme Court on Thursday ordered a new round of appeals for convicted murderer Jacob John Dougan, Jr., one of four black men who killed a white hitchhiker as a sign that a racial revolution had begun.

In ordering the new appeals, the court said Dougan's trial attorney, Ernest Jackson, had failed to raise meritorious legal claims on appeal and had a conflict of interest in representing Dougan's co-defendant, Elwood Barclay

In January, the court blocked Barclay's scheduled execution for the same reasons and is now considering a second direct appeal, Dougan and Barclay were convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to die for the June 17, 1974, shooting death of Steven A. Orlando in Duval County. Two other codefendants were found guilty of second-degree murder.

Orlando, who was white, had been selected as their victim at random. The group, which called itself the Black Liberation Army, claimed that they were starting a revolution against whites.

In an unsigned opinion, the court said it could not grant Barclay a new round of appeals and deny a new appeal to codefendant Dougan under almost identical circumstances.

The court summarily rejected as being without merit Dougan's second argument that the court's consideration of extra-record material-confidential psychiatric reports on Death Row inmates-justified a new appeal.

Why?

Gov Bob Graham's rationale for supporting the death penalty is that it is needed to send a message to those who would deprive others of life. If that's true, we're not sure what Graham would make of the message sent by the execution early Thursday of Arthur Goode.

Goode had been convicted of the sex slaying of a nine-year-old boy in Cape Coral. It was not Goode's first offense—he was also convicted of killing an II year-old boy in Virginia. He showed no remorse for those crimes until just moments before he was strapped into the electric chair and executed.

But then, there's little if any evidence to suggest Goode realized the gravity of his offense—or even of his situation. That's notwith tanding the opinion of the three psychiatrists, appointed by Graham, who spent 30 whole minutes with Goode before pronouncing him sane enough to be killed.

Simply put, Goode has been insane nearly his entire life. According to sources at the Florida Clearinghouse on Criminal Justice, who have seen copies of his psychological reports, Goode had been in and out of mental hospitals since he was three years old. Reporters who took part in Goode's final press conference Wednesday afternoon agreed: Goode was a very sick man. Because of his illness, he was a very dangerous man.

Florida law makes provision for people like Goode, although as his case shows, those provisions do not always work. The law says people are not legally responsible for crimes they commit while insane, and that the insane shall not be executed. It was that second provision which required the appointment of the three psychiatrists who certified Goode as sane. Insanity, the law recognizes, is an illness because the insane cannot control their behavior. Laws mean nothing to them. Notions of "deterrence" mean nothing to them. And just as the law and the lives of those two children meant nothing to Goode, his death will mean nothing to the people like him out there on the streets.

Then what purpose will his death serve? Why did he have to die?

Once again, the system has come down most heavily on the weakest among us — the poor, the sick, the powerless.

The only purpose Goode's death serves is to make the brutality of systems that much more obvious.

Wilder placed on 'most wanted' list

LOS ANGELES —
Christopher Wilder, a photographer who allegedly lures his victims with promises of modeling jobs, was placed Thursday on the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted" as a suspect in the kidnap, rape and torture of one woman and the disappearance of six others.

The bodies of two of the women have been found

"We have a strong feeling he is in the western part of the United States," FBI spokesman John Hoss said "The guy has a liking for grand prix racing and there was an event last week in Long Beach and another coming up in Riverside."

Hoss added the FBI "has no concrete evidence Wilder is in Southern California."

At an unusual news conference in Washington to announce Wilder's addition to the top 10 list, FBI official Oliver Revell described the fugitive as "a continuing active memace"

Wilder, 39, an Australian-boen photographer whose identity has been known for less than a month, was described by the I Bl as "a badly wanted fugitive."

He is wanted for the kidnapping of a Tallahassee, Fla., woman who was abducted on March 20 from a thopping mall and raped and tortured. The woman managed to escape in Bainbridge, Ga., and provided authorities with their first description of Wilder.

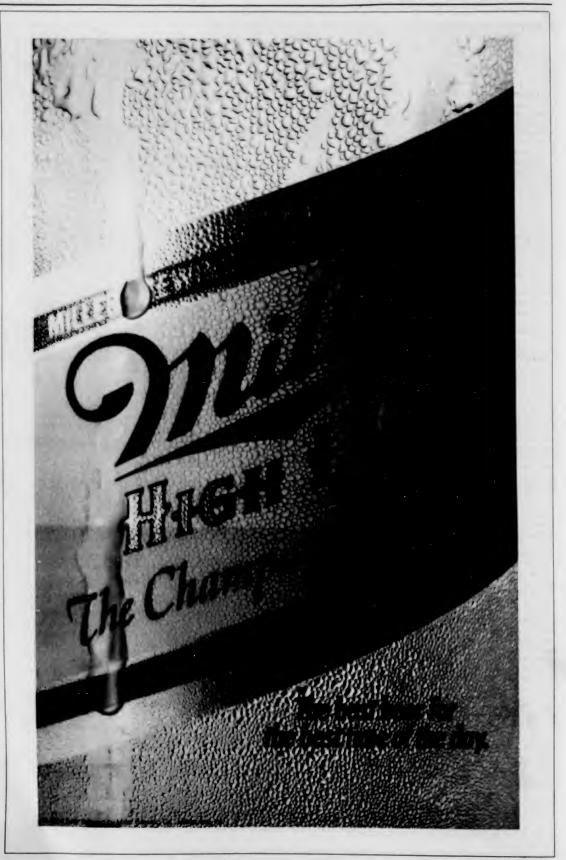

Revell said Wilder also is a suspect in the disappearances of us other women, who he described as young, white, attractive and interested in modeling.

"We have reason to believe he is extremely active and very dangerous," Revell said

Revell said Wilder is known to randomly approach young women in shopping malls and business areas. After identifying himself as a professional photographer, he tries to persuade the young woman to accompany him from the area for photo sessions.

If Wilder is responsible for the other six disappearances, Revell said, it would be a "classic case of serial murders, sexually motivated."

The FBI said Wilder's abandoned 1973 Chrysler was discovered Thursday in Winnie, Texas.

Opponents of nuclear buildup meet

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Today is "Freeze Friday," and the Tallahassee Peace Coalition is sponsoring a noon gathering in Lewis Park in downtown Tallahassee for people opposed to the build-up of nuclear weapons - and particularly the MX missile

"It's an issue of survival," said Ira Schort, peace coalition spokesman. "We're saying that we already have too many nuclear weapons, and we don't really need the MX missile as a deterrant."

Schorr said there was another very good reason the United States shouldn't proceed with plans to build the MX system -

"the arms race is a severe economic drain," said Schort "And if the MX missile is built, (congressional) District 2 - that's us folks - will pay $47 million over the three to five-year period it takes to build the $30 billion system.

Schorr said he got his figures from Employment Research Associates, a Michigan think-tank which has done projections of what the MX will cost every district in the U.S.

"We want to send a message in favor of a freeze on nuclear arms to the community. and the (U.S. Rep.) Don Fuqua, who supports the MX missile, and to all politicians in office," Schorr said.

The Tallahassee Peace Coalition is asking people to wear royal blue clothing or ribbons to today's rally. Major Kent Spriggs will be on hand to deliver a declaration of support, and there will be music by acoustic guitarist Ben Green

LEGISLATURE '84

Legislators approve first bill

I STIED PHEND INTERNATIONAL

The House Thursday sent the first bill of legislative session to Gov. Bob Graham, but it didn't quite match up to first bills of other years.

Several years ago the first bill to reach Graham's desk was an overhaul of the state's criminal justice system. This year's merely renames a stretch of coastal road in northeast Florida.

Less than a half hour into its first day of considering legislation, the House voted 111-2 for the bill, which had cleared the Senate on the first day of the session Tuesday

The bill (SB 174) renames a portion of State Road A1A as "First Coast Highway" in commemoration of the area's historical firsts including the nation's first permanent city. St. Augustine. The name change would apply in Nassau, Duval and St. Johns counties.

I wo items on the "women's agenda" including new child support enforcement rules and an effort to offset the Supreme Court's collegiate sex discrimination ruling won Senate committee approval

On another equal opportunity matter, the Senate Education Committee voted to make Florida colleges and universities disclose any racial or religious covenants in foundation grants Chairman Jack Gordon, D-Miami Beach, offered the bill (SB 220) to keep Arab nations from funding diplomatic studies which, in some states, have sought to give academic respectability to anii Israel policies.

Sen Betty Castor, D Tampa, won approval in the Senate Judiciary Civil Committee for her bill (SB 144) setting up a new mechanism for enforcing child-support orders. The committee merged her bill with one by Chairman Jim Scott, R-Fort Lauderdale, Setting the same requirements for making divorsed spouses pay alimony.

The committee also approved a proposed "I'ducational I quity Act" by Sen. Roberta Fox, D Miami, forbidding celleges and universities to discriminate on the basis of sex, race, handicap or martial status. The Fox and Castor bills are both prominent items on the "women's agenda," an informal list of priorities backed by feminist legislators in the 1984 legislative session.

Sen Castor said child-support statistics indicate that "within two years of a court order, payments drop off dramatically." She said that if a divorced person gets more than two payments behind, odds against recovery are high.

Her bill would set up county clearinghouses for back payments, enforceable through court-ordered liens against wages.

"Now, it will be the state's responsibility," she said.

"Everyone will pay into a county depository and there will be penalties associated with it. When there is a court order, there will be a wage deduction order — which, of course, does not become applicable unless there is a delinquency."

The bill provides that child support payments are not considered "delinquent" until they become 30 days overdue. She said her bill also would allow court appeals to lift a lien, if "the paying spouse" lost a job or was otherwise unable to pay.

"It's not likely that a judge is going to ry to get blood from a stone," she said

In addition to academic opportunity, the "Educational Equity Act" would require equal access for both sexes in shoool athletics programs. The bill's sponsor, a Miami lawyer, said too many schools reserved their sports areas for boys' teams on Friday and Saturday nights — making girls' soccer teams, for instance, play at mid week.

"This would give the girls' teams prime time," said Sen. Fox

Donna Burnell, a lobbyist for the National Organization for Women said the los proposal would forbid state supported institutions to channel young women into secretarial and home making courses, while advising boys to take business management studies. She said it would also prevent schools from densing women admission to graduate programs because they are single—thus presumed likely to marry and leave school before completing doctoral work.

Das Kapital, page 18

She also said the bill was introduced before the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling the the Grove City College case, in which the court held that a campus would not lose all its federal funding if one department discriminated against women. The NOW lobbysis said, however, that "it ties in nicely," with feminist efforts to counteract that ruling.

The House on Thursday tentatives agreed to create a permanent Missing Children Information Clearinghouse within the state Department of Law Enforcement.

The clearinghouse, currently established year-to-year in the state budget, was created in response to the tragedy involving Adam Walsh, the six year old Broward County youngster who was abducted and found murdered in 1981.

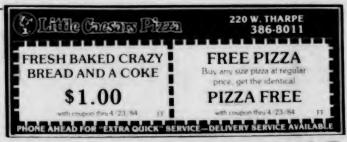

A House committee, hoping a show of frugality will staff efforts to constitutionally limit state revenue, voted Thursday to cut state publication spending in half.

The House Governmental Operations Committee also approved a Republicanbacked bill to stop state agencies from going on spending sprees in the final quarter of fiscal years — to get rid of any leftover money and avoid budget cuts in subsequent years.

The committee postponed action, however, on a GOP constitutional amendment that would limit the number of state employees to roughly 1 percent of Florida's population. That proposal (HJR 438) by House Minority Leader Ron Richmond, R-New Port Richey, could mandate an immediate layoff of 6,500 employees.

Election officials from across the state told a House committee Thursday voters prefer a simple presidential primary ballot instead of the "monstrosity" they faced March 13.

Florida this year employed a system of direct election of presidential convection delegates. The new system was set up by supporters of former Gos. Reubin Askew, who was the early favorite to win his home state before dropping out of the race.

Radical politics and an art of quality

BY JAY MURPHY

Emile de Antonso, the man Andy Warhol referred to as the only art teacher he ever had, is in Tallahassee this weekend to dispel some myths. De Antonso is one of the premier filmmakers in America, having been nominated for an Oscar for his history of the Victnam war In the Year of the Pig (shown recently by CPE) and has been an innovative influence on documentary cineastes ever since his first film, the 1964 Point of Order which was the first documentary film made without narration.

A fixture of the New York art scene, a man who recognized the talents of Robert Rauschenberg, Jasper Johns, Warhol and others before the official art world bestowed its recognition is a formidable raconteur, drinker, and political iconoclast who was the only filmmaker on Richard Nixon's "enemies list"—on his visit to Tallahassee he could talk about just about anything.

"I want to talk about immigration" he recently said, how America has become a "melting pot for fascists," a "home for all the Nazis of the world." Florida is one of the best places for such a talk, as the cantankerous filmmaker knows

A survivor of the Nixon era, de Antonio sees the present situation as much more dangerous for political dissenters in the United States. De Antonio himself is still a closely watched figure by agencies such as the FBI, which has become the subject of his latest movie, a biography of himself as seen by that agency

De Antonio, who was arrested for his film Underground, a film composed of interviews with the then clandestine Weather Underground, has some comments on the FBI "They have always been lousy at catching real criminals because they have always been a political police force."

And not a very good one One FBI agent complained of trying to pick a lock to de Antonio's studio to steal a print of Underground when he couldn't. Another left a message with a hotel clerk to tell him whenever de Antonio appeared. Of course de Antonio came (and went) under an assumed name so the FBI was again stifled.

Emile de Antonio

The FBI's plans to mug the filmmaker and steal the film (the Weather Underground was the object of one of the largest police hunts in U.S. history) were finally ended when courts ruled that filmmakers have the right to make a film about whatever they choose. Attorney General Edward H. Levi in the Ford administration initiated a new set of guidelines which granted filmmakers the same First Amendment rights as any other news media. That historic action has since been dissolved in the wash of repression by Ronald Reagan, who has restored most of the pre-Watergate procedures in the Justice department and the FBI.

His latest film, the 1982 In the King of Prussia, was the most difficult to raise money for of any of his controversial montages. That was partly due to the nature of the subject—the Berrigan brothers and their uncompromising opposition to the arms race. The Berrigans oppose all forms of killing, in which they include abortion, so many rich liberal women who would otherwise support the film would not. They are also staunchly pro-PLO, so Jewish money disappeared. The film survived due to the support of many of de Antonio's artist friends such as Carl Andre and Robert Rauschenberg, who gave $15,000 to the project.

Martin Sheen, who donated his salary for his role in the epic Gandhi to various peace groups around the world, donated not only $5,000 but his services as an actor.

In the King of Prassio is part re-creation, part documentary of the Plowshares Eight trial in Pennsylvania where the Berrigans and their dedicated cohorts were tried for entering a local GE plant and smashing nosecones of nuclear warheads.

Sheen plays Judge Samuel Salus, who confided to the courtroom audience that he would rather see the defendants sent to a "Siberian cell" or a "leper colony in Puerto Rico."

Judge Salus would not allow the defense of justification to be argued in court—a plea of self defense against a greater danger, the threat of nuclear holocaust. Daniel Berrigan argued that their act of disarmament was justified in the face of the unprecedented build up of nuclear weapons.

The Superior Court of Pennsyl ania, in an unprecedented and dramatic decision, recently ruled that the argument of justification in cases of civil disobedience nust be heard in court.

That decision, which at least temporarily frees the Plowshares Eight, is a great vindication for filimmaker Emile de Antonio, for the arguments Judge Salus would not hear in his courtroom—the testimony of Daniel Elisberg, Robert Aldridge (a designer of nuclear warheads for Lockheed Corp. turned peace activist) and many others on the danger of nuclear war—speak at length in de Antonio's film.

In fact, the argument of the Plowshares Eight is the crux of the film and illustrative of de Antonio's innovative approach to film ait. One of his cameramen suggested a slow pan shot of "all those great faces" during Daniel Berrigan's final, climactic speech at the end of the trial. To de Antonio, that was pandering to the audience and insulting. "No, I want the shot on Berrigan's face the entire time. What he's saying is important." The result is a tense, closely cropped frame of Daniel Berrigan's head during the speech in which he names the warheads "hammers of Hell." "They don't even deserve the name 'weapon'. They are some nameless horror aimed at life."

John R. Dowling, film critic for Bulletin of Atomic Scientists and viewer of more than 300 films on the arms race, including If You Love This Planet and Atomic Cafe, wrote that In the King of Prussia was "the most thought provoking film I've seen on the arms race," a statement which was censored from his review by the editors.

The movie has also fulfilled some other ambitions of the political artist for de Antonio. Besides drawing huge crowds in Europe, In the King of Prussia has stimulated many more acts of civil disobedience similar to the Plowshares' action. One action was planned immediately after a showing of the film in Burlington, Vermont. Robin Lloyd, a local peace activist, describes what happened—"No one was about to leave. I felt I was officiating at a nieeting of Paris Commune. A woman in the front row stood up and said 'We've got to make this happen at GE!" "Several months later saw the first civil disobedience action in the history of Burlington at GE where Vulcan and ininguin weapons are made, high speed machine guis used to slaughter peasants in Vietnam and El Salvador.

The film premiered in Minneapolis, Minnesota November, 1980, the day before a massive sit in at the Honeywell plant there. In the biggest demonstration there since 1971, 577 persons were arrested, including the wife of the police chief and a wife of one of the judges in Minneapolis.

The influence of the film on the peace movement must be satisfying for one such as de Antonio who refuses to separate art from politics, who believes in "an art of quality and radical politics. They are not incompatible."

They are a unity in de Antonio's work, from his collage of the 1934 Army McCarthy hearings, Point of Order, to his history of Richard Nixon's political career seen through the eyes of the media in Milhous, which drew the full wrath of the Nixon White House. Each film has a different form while exploiting the classic filmic technique of montage. "Truth and its forms make hard demands in our police state," de Antonio said in an interview with Red Buss magazine, sponsor of his appearance Sunday at the Unitarian Church on Meridian Rd. It is clear talking to de Antonio that he feels most filmmakers are not riving to the challenge.

Bertolucci and Costa Gavras made better early films in the gangster genre than their extranganzas such as 1900 or Z. They and other political filmmakers fail to change the form of their films while they challenge the messages of the usual Hollywood film. Other filmmakers such as Jean Luc Godard ghettoize themselves, as in Godard's 6x2 series for French television that de Antonio says "exhibits more contempt for the audience than anything I've ever seen."

De Antonio's appearance in Tallahassee Sunday and Monday nights (the latter, a talk in Moore Auditorium

Martin Sheen and Daniel Berrigan from In the King of Prussia

Edgar Hoover calling him a "toy buildog"), of painting this book Puinters Puinting was published this spring, a complement to his film of the same name), his "theory of immigration" or his method of filmmaking, he brings to bear a lifetime of being in the forefront of both social struggle and the advance guard in art.

Emile de Antonio will speak at 7:30 p.m., April 8, Sunday

You can still break dance in Santa Clara, California, but you may have to buy a permit. Local merchants are urging authorities to license the dance craze as a means of controlling it. # Why is it here?

BY FRED LENHOFF

The small dog in the lady's lap has curly white hair, and it looks at you with ridiculous black eyes, like it would bite you, given half a chance. Its name is probably "Fifi," and its owner probably feeds it table scraps, and it no doubt barks at strangers in an endless "yip yip yip." until you'd just want to shoot the damin thing or donate it to the Florida State University Research Lab

But you don't worry, because the dog is a painted dog, part of the huge mural that covers an entire wall in FSU's Longmire Building, Room 201. Perhaps you've had a class in that room, and while some prof was blowing on and on about Hegelian dialectic or some such blather, you dropped your pen in disgust and stared at the mural "Why is it here?" you wondered Hecause "that was where we had the biggest wall," and Daisy Flory, dean of faculty at FSU. Indeed In 1960, before all the hideous buildings cropped up on FSU's campus. Longmire was an important building, a sort of ballroom, meeting room, student union. Only later were those atrecious orange and white chairs brought in and boilted to the floor, transforming the sometimes ballroom into a classroom, but a classroom with a neato mural, a classroom with class.

In any event, in 1960 Jack Gorta, a New York real estate inveilor, donated the painting to FSU. Gorta was a friend of Adolph Karl, a professor in the FSU Art department at the time.

Intitled "Le Tapis Vert" (The Green Carpet), the painting was done by a French artist in 1807, that's one old dog you been lookin' at If you read the signature in the bottom left corner of the painting, it appears to say "Gus Dore" But you can't be sure

One thing is certain, however the "green carpet" in question is the card table that is the focus of the painting Seated at the table, a gentleman who resembles Chester Hayes in staring up at some fair-haired lovely in a long dress with straps and layers, bejeweled and bejangled, and jeepers, it probably weighs 50 pounds alone. Hmm perhaps the and her dress are the focus of the painting.

Behind them, an archetypal stiff Sir John Gielgud-type sits with his cards spread out in front of him. His high white collar probably prevents his head from moving. The look on his face betrays either a poor hand of cards or a painful case of niles.

Other intriguing characters abound in the "quasi-Diamond Jim Brady" painting, as Flory calls it one round gentleman reclining in a chair in the wings of the mural is reminescent of Joseph Sedley of Vanity Vair (the book) notionety

But most fascinating (the yip yip dog aside, of course) is a character seated in the foreground who stared straight out of the painting, a contemplative filt to his head. His apparent ambivelence toward the affairs of the green table and his prominent position in the painting makes you wonder. Perhaps he is the artist himself.

Over and around all these people hangs a thick cloud of what looks like smoke or is it just the accumulated dirt of nearly two centuries? Either way, the smoke reminds you that you could use a cigarette, so after the professor has ceased his babble you wander into the hall, and you say "Good das" and tip your hat to several people, even though they look at you funny.

BY SUSAN CLARENDON SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

I uigi, the world renowned Jazz dance innovator will share his magic with Tallahassee dance students this weekend in a three day workshop at the Susan Ice Dance

Ice, who said her first class with the Gene Kelly Fred Astaire protege left her in tears and with a conviction to bring the teacher to Tallahassee, is sponsoring the workshop for the second time in two years

"Oh, Sweetheart, I just don't go to local studios," Ice said Luigi told her in their first telephone conversation, which resulted in his 1982 workshop at her studio-"When I met him at the airport, he said, 'You're either one hell of a business woman or I was meant to be here," Ice said. "Since then he's decided he was meant to be here."

The workshop, beginning Friday with three classes and continuing with two classes Saturday and Sunday, will give local dancers a chance to get acquainted with the technique which launched such Jazz dance greats as Gus Chardano and Joe Tremain

According to Ice, Luigi's style differs dramatically from other "hot and flashy" jazz dance styles in that it works with the body " The difference is also apparent in the teacher's appearance, which lee described as "low key, unlike most show business personalities."

When I first saw him (at a dance workshop three vears ago) I thought he could have been a little old man selling toothbrushes," she said. "He's not interested in impressing. He's interested in conveying the meaning of his technique "

The American-born dancer developed his movement style about 40 years ago as physical therapy. As a result of a car accident in his youth, Luigi was completely paralyzed on one side of his body. It was his experimentation with movement therapy that resulted in his unique dance technique

Because of facial disfiguration from the accident, the dancer switched from performance to teaching, Ice said "He was cast in Singing in the Rain because he could wear a hat and an umbrella to cover up one side of his face

As a teacher, I uigi has shared with other dancers the secrets he learned about movement when he began to stand without support in his recovery from paralysis.

Luigi

"What had done so much for his body did manifold for healthy bodies," Ice said

A philosophy of closely integrated mind and body is central to Luigi's technique, which utilizes images of a tangible space which the dancer can "hold on to.

Fundamentally based in Ballet, the technique is systematic and thorough, Ice said "It makes any other warm up seem Mickey Mouse "

To register for the workshop, call 385-0977,

You too can push things on television

UNITED PRINCIPLENATIONAL

NEW HAVEN Conn - If television commercials are your meat-as they apparently are for people like the A-1 Sauce man-you, too, can start a career selling people things they didn't know they needed

You may not be instructing restaurant employees on how to improve hamburger on network television right away You'll probably start on a channel so local somebody like Magnum P.1 might need help finding it. But it's a beginning

"Commericals are fun to do," says Ann Settel of Greenwich, who taught piano in a private school, aspires to be an actress, and has just finished her first commercial

Many of the people seen in commercials are professional actors, but there are social workers, lawyers, stockbrokers, school teachers, secretaries, and cops, for example, who want to try their hand at it.

Like Settel, some of them enroll in a 10-day course taught by Bob Collier in New York. His school is for people new to commercials and for show business professionals who want to improve auditioning technique and boost their income through commercials

His beginners usually work for a one-time only set fee at first. There are no residuals, and no fringe benefits unlike unionized actors who make more money and have better working conditions, receive residuals, and are protected by

Collier is a former anchorman, charges clients $420 to show them the ropes in his Manhattan studio, and aside from the technical know-how, Collier and his wife, Helen, try hard to instill confidence in their pupils.

"They give you a positive philosophy towards yourself and the work in general," Settel said. "And the right attitude certainly helps. There are usually a lot of other people who are going out for the same part. It's really a business of rejection

She appeared recently in her first commercial as one of four customers encouraging viewers to patronize a 12-store chain selling electronics on New York's Long Island 11 like to shop here" was about all she was required to say in the time allotted to get the message across

Felicity Woods of Stamford, Conn., a model in her native England, found the Collier course worthwhile and the Collier couple inspiring. But she and her husband, Richard, a composer, "Didn't realize we would have a lot of running around from agency to agency. We followed a few trails that didn't get us anywhere," she said. As a result, they didn't find much work, which she said, "was mostly our fault."

The best advice Woods could give students of commercials is to try not to think they're making fools of themselves. "That's the biggest block for most people You see the camera eye looking at you and it's intimidating."

Toni Volza of Waterbury, Conn., took Collier's crash course to supplement her income as an actress. There were five people in her class. She said they were "people who had no acting experience—they couldn't read the cue cards.

"By the end of the course," she said, "I think they could have gotten a commercial."

"What's nice about the Collier studio is when you finish, you can go back and they'll help you out on their own time," she said. "If you need help with a resume, say, they'll tell you to stop in. They'll say, 'We'll look it over "

Persian Gulf returns

Ask Tallahassee's returning prodigal sons Persian Gulf about life, sex, drugs, rock 'n roll in the big city and you get strange responses

"There is a cop every 15 meters" said Hal Padgett, a Persian Gulf cohort, and Hal Shows, phoned in Philadelphia, said "It sounds like an exaggeration, but there seems to be two cops on every corner." But the cheeses are good The music scene is "not that much different than Tallahassee" said Shows, the band's guirar player, songwriter and lead singer, in that there are only a few bands worth listening to. There are many more bands in Philly, but many are derivative, synth pop Human League clones and the interesting groups, as in Tallahassee, are the hardcore bands that entertain in a dilapidated Philadelphia bank building called the Renaissance Ballroom

No one in the band regrets moving from Tallahassee a year ago and, as the three piece group returns, their new EP 'Changing the Weather" is being pressed.

A seven-song EP, the record features some of their older material familiar to Tallahassee dance crowds-"I'm Joe Curious," "Katie Lit a Fire," and "I'm So Glad I'm Living In the Free World" among others, and new songs "It's a Good Thing" and "Pieces of Eve.

The record "exudes joy," says Shows, the main ingredient of successful rock 'n roll. Persian Gulf returns some of the power to rock music, giving it the liberating qualities of some of the early rock recordings. Heavily influenced by '50s rockabilly and '77-'78 punk, Persian Gulf above all relies on the classical harmonies and rhythms of the Beatles.

"Changing the Weather" features the drive of PG-the pounding backbeat of C Bardo III on drums, the twisting, slippery funk bass playing of John Adams, the rasping guitar and bitter, biting lyrics of Hal Shows. PG's music is a dance brawl that keeps you on your toes.

The EP was engineered by Peter Humphries, a chief engineer at Philadelphia's Sigma Sound, home of the "Philadelphia Sound" and the studio where David Bowie recorded his "Young Americans" foray into funkdom.

The piano pieces and an occasional synthesizer overlay was performed by each of the members of the band. They are satisfied with the result. "Changing the Weather" appeals in near equal measure to to the dancing feet.

There is an acoustic number for those who enjoyed their acoustic breaks. introduced over a year ago in Tallahassee It's called "It's a Good Thing.

"Race War" has never sounded better; "You don't even have a dime left for shining your shoe but at least you know there's somebody lower than you hard working mothers in the lines/nobody makes it like he could've one time" Although the real message is in the loud, pounding thythm, Persian Gulf has a progressive message, whether it is "I don't wanna fight in your race war" and "find another curly head to beat, " or the sarcasm of "(I'm So Glad I'm) Living In The Free World '

One of the more danceable tunes Persian Gulf performs, "Free World" proclaims "I spent my life in school/now I pass time dreaming on a barstool." Rage, alienation, frustration are staples of the Persian Gulf songbook, providing intellectual cooking to accompany the dance stew.

The new song "Pieces of Eve" is a standout Like some other PG songs, there is an elusive, mysterious quality to the song-something is not quite right.

Playing regularly in Philadelphia, they have begun to attract a small following in the competitive, far flung, suburb ringed city. They play in just about every club, places such as Khyver Pass and the MOR Penn's Pub, which got them some newspaper notice.

Not everyone has wide open arms, however While drinking in Dobb's, a bar whose manager had booked the band, having taken a liking to them, Shows and Padgett, "peacefully drinking," were thrown out by one of the bartenders Outside telling prospective customers not to frequent the bar, Shows and Padgett were accosted and punched in the face by some local roughnecks.

One bar manager passed them a note during one of their shows that read-"You are 75% too loud.

On the heels of their noon performance in the FSU Union courtyard Wednesday, Persian Gulf plays two shows at the Downunder Friday and Saturday night. They'll play at The Edge Sunday. During their stay here PG amassed quite a dance throng. This weekend should see the reemergence of the crazed gritty garage rock crowd, those tired of gang posturing at Smitty's or U2 covers.

This is MacLaine's fifth nomination. She was previously nominated for Some Came Running, The Apartment, Irma La Douce and The Turning Point.

A Democratic love fest

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

PITTSBURGH — The three Democratic presidential candidates avoided the open clashes that have dominated the last few weeks, stressing issues over differences in their seventh debate.

Meeting five days before the Pennsylvania primary, Sen. Gary Hart and former Vice-president Walter Mondale steered clear of the acrimony that marked their previous encounters and civil rights leadr Jesse Jackson was put on a more equal footing to present his views.

Given a chance to ask Hart a question, Jackson joked, "Wouldn't you like to beat Mr. Mondale?" Hart laughed and said, "I'd enjoy beating Mr. Reagan even more."

There was general agreement on a range of issues, the need to leave Social Security intact, hold government to a high ethical standard and revitalize depressed industries.

Hart opened by saying the three candidates "share the basic goals and values of the Democratic Party."

· Mondale soon had harsh words for the opposing party.

In a reference to the Reagan administration, he said.
"Every day another rotten apple falls out of the tree in Washington and the president's looking somewhere else."

Ron and Nancy threatened

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

NEW YORK — The President and Mrs. Reagan were delayed in leaving a dinner of the New York State Federation of Catholic School Parents Thursday night because of a "threat situation," White House spokesman Mark Weinberg said.

Weinberg said the Reagans remained in a secure holding room after attending a dinner of the federation while Secret Service agents and New York police attended to the unspecified threat.

"The situation was resolved," he said

Weinberg would not say whether the president and Mrs. Reagan, who were concluding a daylong visit to Manhattan, were in danger at any point.

"There was a threat situation," he said "The president was held while the threat situation was resolved."

Free food. Your legislator has the ace numero uno job for that. Beats out sportswriters who, at best, only get middlerange beef and sweet baked beans in the press box and sometimes only cold popcorn. Beats out managers at MacDonald's where you can stuff chicken McNuggets till you explede. Let's face it a person can get graphically sick of the grub that's colonizing the world and long for tofu withing a week.

Your legislator is given variety. Quantity. Quality. He. She/It virtually need never buy a meal in Tallahassee. A tiny glance at the 1984 Revised Social Calendar (alas, scholars, I never saw the holograph ms. or even the first edition) reveals 16 receptions, 7 breakfasts, 16 luncheons, 21 dinners, 6 barbeques, 4 cocktail parties, a brunch, a coffee and a Red Mass. And it only goes up to May 12th.

Like Monday your legislator can eat and drink off the bloated bucks of the Florida Petroleum Marketers Association at the Civic Center then whize out to the fabulous Shrine Club for more fun at a shindig thrown by the Florida Disabled Veterans. This is a slow day. Imagine four parties an average per day, five or six days a week. I just hope they've all read their Miss Manners so they'll know how to behave.

Don't get me wrong. I'm not implying that these aren't bang up affairs. Some of them are snazzy, some of them rise above the plastic forks and styrofoam cups which attend even the most elegant of them (is there some kind of huge psenic accourtement lobby in this state I just don't know about?). A few of them have the best barbeque you'll ever cet (and the most) and some have vino that miraculously ion?

Yugoslav Riesling out of a box

So manufacture or bribe some connections (nepotism works: are you related to the Mighty?) and get yourself invited to some legishables. Why read Dorothy Clifford every week and sigh when with a little effort you can do something about it? Here is a social climber's guide to the best Session Soirees.

12 April The Governot's Prayer Breakfast at the Civic Center, 7:45 a.m. Worth getting up at an unGodly hour for-Eggs, grits, hash browns, ham, bacon, biscuits, OJ, cafe, opart carper. Some sincere and decent speaker addresses moral issues (like world hunger) while the people who spend your tax dollars chow down. A study in exquisite irony, 16 April. Cocktail Reception Pooliside at the Hilton, 6 p.m. This baby is courtesy of the National Pool and Spa Industries, who will doubtless show off their bronzed, muscled torsos to the ubiquitous lawmaker flabs who show up to drink the booze and down the dainty hors d'oeuvres at the silhest hotel in town. The question is — will they chuck Lee Moffitt in the water for fun?

I8 April Barbeque at the McMullen Armory, 6 p.m. The Florida Rural Electric Cooperatives Association barbeque everything that moves. Don'i go too early and don't stand too still—it could be you. The sublime pleasure of this one is seeing Sen. Clark Maxwell being down home. An even sublimer pleasure would be to see Toni Jennings (she of the Nancy-clone factory) in Gloria Vanderbilt jeans and a cute little bandana. I didn't see her at this last year, but I have hopes for this year. (C'mon, Toni—make my day.)

19 April FSU Theatre Night - The Threepenns Opera at Mainstage, 8:15 p.m. A wonderful opportunity to see what few legisafficionados show up for a culture bath and the fresh strawberries at the reception. About the only one who could understand the wonderfully-nasty social satire of the thing is Jack Gordon, a long culturatus in a desert of bimbos and balding philistines.

24 April: Check out the Reception and Dinner at the Civic Center (6:30-8 p.m) given by the Florida Association of Realtors. Realtors have more money than anyone else. Realtors are in business to impress people. Therefore, they should lay on a hell of a good d. Like, real cocktails, you know? And served in those little plastic glasses instead of styrofoam!

27:29 April. Bring the kids, it's the legislative Trail Ride where the Powers That Be dress up and play cowboy in the Apalachicola National Forest (may they be eaten by red burs).

9 May. The Florida Chiropractic Association treats the Gang to steak at the National Guard Armory, 6:30 p.m. This is a real man's even — stuffing down the old charred flesh courtesy of people who take care of the aches and pains incurred when they start being less of real men (how many body-builders in the House and Senate?) This one probably features extremely sweet iced tea —bring a bottle of 17 May: Tribute Dinner (black tie optional) 8 p.m. at the civic center, given by the Mental Health Association. Hot dog, a formal. Get out that prom tux. Go talk Oedipal complex with the gang.

I mean, who says you have a dead Spring with all these organized giggles going on? Phone your legislator today and tell him you want to play too. After all, it's an election year.

The opening hymn is over and church has begun You're sitting in the second new, almost directly under the minister as he stands and begins the Sunday service with a prayer

Wait a minute! That's not the prayer you usually hear. You look around to see if you're in the right church. What's going on?

What's going on is that your minister is using the new Inclusive Language Lectionary. publication of the National Council of Churches that deletes male references from selections of the Bible The Son of Man is the "Human One" in the new lectionary Brothers are now joined by sisters, friends and neighbors, and the kingdom of God is now His Realm

A lectionary is simply a book containing lessons from the Scriptures to be read at church services, but the new Lectionary, published earlier this year, has become a source of rid the Bible of what the controversy throughout the religious world controversy reached Florida State Wednesday afternoon when two religion professors argued the pros and cons

While 35 people listened in the Chapel of the Resurrection on West Jefferson Street, professors Lawrence Cunningham and John Carey squared off in a

- John Carey

good natured debate Carey supporting the language changes and Cunningham attempting to refute them

"I very translator betrays," Cunningham warned, quoting in English from an Italian proverb

Many have characterized Christianity as a maledominated religion, claiming that the Bible caters to the needs of men and rejects the concerns of women. In response to this, National Council of Churches' task force produced the Lectionary to its patriarchal content They hoped to make the language less exclusive of

The Old and New Testaments, according to Cares, were derived from patriarchal culture, and at the time the scriptures were written, masculine language was accepted without objection. The need for changes, he said, grew out of the women's movement and a general awakening in this country over the nuances of language

"Women are hurting in the Christian community," Carey said "When the women of the community take pain, men should become involved. The stones of women in the Bible have been left out A lot of caring women are left out of the Christian religion '

A woman from the audience agreed with Carey "For 2000 years women have been left out," she said "Just because its been scriptures?"

Cares said he hoped the Lectionary would make the Bible more acceptable and appealing to all people, but Cunningham disagreed

"Let us be clear." Cunningham said "Thes are not transposing one language to another They are trying to get behind the intent of the Bible

Cunningham said he doesn't approve of the Lectionary "not being used in private devotion, but for public use " He said he feels that the utterance of the traditional words echo their rich heritage every time he hears them during church services.

"I think that we need to be very, very careful about changing the Bible. Cunningham said He warned of de constructing the test with word by word alterations

A majority of the audience supported Cunningham Aman asked, "If you do away with sexist statements, what are you going to do with anti-Semilics21

A woman said the Lectionary was not addressing the deeper problems which are absent from the Bible

"The change," she said, "has to be done with integrity not just pasted over with word changes "

FSU softball team deserves a bid

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS PLAMERAL STAFF WRITTER

Oh, NCAA, if only you could see what WE SEE

Going into the home stretch of the season, the Florida State softball team has proven to just about everybody that it has made the transition very smoothly from slow-pitch to fast pitch

Going into this weekend's invitational hosted by the Mississippi University for Women, the Lady Seminoles boast an impressive 29-4.2 record against good. competition. Though head coach JoAnne. Graf had to fill the schedule with Division II and III teams, she was still able to find several competitive Division I opponents to

In some ways, the team's success is not so surprising, considering Florida State's record as a slow pitch team. ISU won the NCAA national championship two out of the three years that it was held and was the runnerup in 1983. In fact, Florida State was considered by many to be the force in slow pitch softball while the sport was a part of NCAA competition

Going into this season, Graf was both apprehensive and optimistic about her team's chances in the new sport. She had good reason to feel both ways. She had the all important pitcher in transfer Tina Kyler, a good number two pitcher in freshman Shelley Berube, and her defensive unit appeared relatively sound. The schedule. however, was almost totally unfamiliar and many of the teams were in the same boat as Florida State in their first year of fast pitch competition.

Iwo season opening victories against Florida A&M showed that Florida State could definitely compete, but didn't show to what extent. Graf said that the ensuing spring break road trip would be a good indication of the team's talent

In a way, it was. The Lads 'Noles went 3.1.2 on that road trip, and played some serious competition. Because of an agreement before the game, the Lady Noles tied Louisiana Tech 0-0, generally considered one of the top teams in the South region Next, the squad dropped a 6-2 heartbreaker to defending champion Texas A&M Despite that and other close losses on the trip, Graf felt happy with the team's situation

And with good reason. Not once has FSU got ten blown out in a game (the 6-2 Texas A&M loss was the largest margin), but has definitely blown out a few teams on its own "We're playing pretty well right now," Graf said. "I think we're doing better than I expected we would. We really didn't know what to expect. Most of the teams we played, we hadn't played before We really improved a lot quickly

At this stage of the season, Florida State is officially ranked second in the South region, behind Louisiana Tech. That is according to Judy Martino, who is the NCAA chairwoman for the South region in softball.

That is good news and bad news for the team. Being second in your region is excellent, except for the fact that the playoff selection committee may in all probability take only one team from the South. "This year, the (South) region is a little bit weak," Martino explained "Being a first-year team, it will be very difficult for FSU to get a bid We understand that they had to schedule a lot of Division II and III teams, but the committee only looks at your record against Division I opponents '

That doesn't mean that FSU is totally out of the picture, though

"Right now, their (FSU's) chances are about as good as anybody's," Martino said "Last year, we took two teams from the South. I've been telling them (the NCAA) that these new teams like FSU are very good They've spoken about putting FSU in the Top 20," Martino continued "That says a lot about their program. Everybody in the country realizes what a strong program FSU had in slow-pitch, and knows how good they can be now "

Though Graf would obviously like a bid. she understands the realities, too. "I don't think the NCAA will give a first-year team a bid," she said. "But we play a pretty tough schedule, and we heat some pretty good ball clubs. They can't tell us we haven't played

We need to beat the rest of the Division I teams on our whedule to be considered for a bid. We're just going to try and make it as difficult for the selection committee as possible not to choose us

What is disappointing about the selection process is the number of spots available for the teams (16). Considering the number of teams now competing in Division I (165), one would think that the NCAA could accommodate a more competitive number and thus give more teams a chance. Graf is definitely not happy with the low number. calling it "absurd.

"It's just ridiculous to have sixteen," she "We're gonna propose that they increase the number to 24. There are just too many good teams. They've staved with 16 for so long, and now more teams are switching over to fast-pitch '

"We think it's too small," agrees Martino, "but they go by proportion We're still hoping that with more teams switching over they'll increase it to 18. We simply want more participation in the first round. That would give us more teams in the region. There's been a lot of talk about

As of now, the Lady 'Noles' chances are fairly small, but they are still there nonetheless. That's not had for a team in a new sport, but then you've got to remember who the team is. Whether or not FSU gets the bid, the team can be proud. Oh, but

McKenzie blazes at Florida Relays

BY DAVE PICARIELLO

FSU TRACK

Racing toward the dream of making the U.S. Olympicteam, Florida State's Leander Mckenzie blazed at last weekend's Florida Relays

McKenzie stunned the field at the Gainesville meet in each of his four races and won the Kearnes-Richardson trophy for the most outstanding performer in the collegiate division.

Saturday, McKenzie charged into the lead going into the final 200 meters of the 400-meter intermediate hurdles and finished first with a time of $0.11—good for a Florida Relays record.

MIXED BAG

 Prior to the 400 meter event. McKenzie anchored the wanning shuttle hurdle relay team. Later, he ran the third leg on the first place two-mile relay team, and then was the lead off man on the mile relay team, which placed third in 3-06.75.

The jumor, from Godby High School, holds the FSU record for the intermediate hurdles (49.73). He was the first Seminole runner to break the 50 seconds barrier for this event.

"I'm quite proud of our team in putting on a heck of a show," PSU head coach Dick Roberts said "Considering the depth of performances throughout the events, we would certainly have been in contention for first place in the Relais had it been a scored meet."

In the field events, Dusts Harmon cleared the bar at 16-6, good enough for second place. Kenny Smith's 7-foot vault in the high jump placed third. Also, the spring-medles relay team of Greg. Allen, Marx Freeman, Eric Riley, and Ray Broughton finished fourth.

The Seminole men will travel to Austin, Texas, this weekend for the Texas Relays

While the men were in Gainesville, the Lady Seminole track team was competing in Athens, Ga. over the weekend.

 I wo of the team's sprinters, Joann Brown and Michele Finn, qualified to compete in the NCAA outdoor national championships

Brown zoomed to a third place finish in the 100 meter hurdles, while Finn posted an 11.40 in the 100 meter dash

"We're picking up little by little," ISU women's coach Gary Winckler said. "I didn't expect Michele or Joann to be so fast so early in the season. We're surprised they made the NCAA times so early. They can concentrate on making the Olympic trials now."

In the middle distance events, Carla Borovscka won the 800-meter run in 2-10.75 and Samantha Green finished third in 2-13,59. Brenda Chiette finished a strong second in the 200-meter dash in 23-84, while I inn finished just 02-behind Cliette for third place.

The Lady 'Noles, who are off this weekend, will put the finishing touches on their training for a meet the following weekend in Baton Rouge, La.

FSU TENNIS

The Lady Seminole tennis team may face one of their toughest tasks this weekend as they try to beat both 16th-ranked University of South Florida and third-ranked Miami this weekend.

The Lady Seminoles will play both USF and Miami in Tampa. The Lady Seminoles will play USF today, while they will play Miami Saturday morning.

"We're looking forward to going down there," women's coach Anne Davis said. "This is the first time since I've been here that we're competing as an underdog."

Davis said that Laura Garcia and Kiki Rocwadowski, the number-one and two singles players for USF, are smart players who don't make many unnecessary errors. FSU's Lee McGuire and Sue Hatch will have to outmanuever them, she said, and cut down on their mistakes in order to beat Garcia and Rocwadowski.

FSU GOLF

Both the FSU men's and women's golf teams finished in the top ten at their recent tournaments.

The Lady 'Noles finished sixth overall at the Peggy Kirk

Despite age, Carlton still mows them down

LNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

ATLANTA-With Steve Carlton, it's a race against

And if his performance the other night was a good indication. Steve Carlton is winning

Carlton is 39 years old. For a fast ball pitcher, which he was most of his career, that's the twilight zone. But thanks to some other pitches he's picked up in recent years, especially the slider, there's reason to believe there's still a few good years remaining in his left arm

Carlton, a 6-foot-5, 220-pounder who works out frequently to stay in top shape has thrown a lot of pitches during his 20-year major league career

"He's always been a hard worker," says his Philadelphia manager, Paul Owens "He worked nearly 300 innings in each of the past two seasons and he usually averages about 15 pitches an inning.

'But don't let last year's win loss record mislead you when Carlton dropped from 23-11 in '82 to 15-16)," said Owens "Look at his other stats. His earned run average, strikeout walk ratio, hits, were all the same. The difference last year was that he went through a long spell where we weren't getting him any runs

"That's why we figure he has a good chance at another fine season this time. I don't believe we will go through a long period of not hitting again. We have too many capable people for that to happen. If we get him a few runs, he'll do the rest

Carlton's 1984 debut was a beaut. Working the first seven innings in a 5-0 victory in Atlanta, he allowed only two hits, a pair of singles separated by 11 straight outs, walked only one and struck out six

As usual, he wasn't talking, but Owens, pitching coach Claude Osteen and Braves manager Joe Torre, who caught Carlton in 1969-71 when they were teammates with the St. Louis Cardinals, were and all three felt the veteran lefthander was better in some ways now than he was in some of his early 20-win seasons.

"He throws more breaking balls now," said Torre. "He keeps his slider down and throws it for strikes. Lefty has matured into a Hall of Fame pitcher."

"He's had some physical problems in the past, but I don't see any sign of them now," said Osteen. "I know he feels good. He's throwing easy and he's getting his pitches where he wants them. In those seven innings against Atlanta he threw only 83 pitches That's barely 80 percent of what you figured he'd throw '

"Any shutout is impressive," said Owens "But shutting out a team like Atlanta in a ball park like Atlanta Stadium, now that's really something. His performance was outstanding "

Carlton shared that shutout with reliever Bill Campbell. so he didn't get credit for No. 56 which would have tied him with former teammate Bob Gibson, Don Sutton and Tom Seaver for ninth place on the all-time list. And if he had allowed one less hit in those seven innings, he probably would have resisted coming out since he's only one shy of the modern National League record (7) for one-hitters

Every time Carlton, who holds the major league record for consecutive starts (465), goes out on the mound, he has a chance to move up among the leaders in one category or

His win over Atlanta was his 301st, moving him ahead of Early Wynn and Lefty Grove and only four behind Eddie Plank. Those six strikeouts in that game raised his already record career total to 3,715. The seven innings moved him past Wynn into 13th place and, with three more starts, he'll move into eighth place ahead of former Phillies star Robin

"One of the things we want to do this season is not overwork Steve," said Osteen "If you let him, he'll do more than he should. He admitted he was stiffening up a bit in the sixth inning, but insisted he could go another inning. That's why we got him out after seven. That was just far enough "

"Steve continues to amaze me," said Torre. "He's a special lefthander. When he's pitching against you, you have to hope he won't have the kind of control he had against us. When he gets ahead of the hitters like that he's got them biting at his pitch. I never saw him that sharp this arly in the season

"He helps his team's offense in that when he's in the game the opposing pitcher, knowing he's not going to have much to work with has a tendency to put pressure on himself. Carlton (who refuses to talk to the media) not only silences himself, he also silences his opponents."

Rudy happy with spring practice

BY DAIVD LEE SIMMONS

Despite witnessing about "the worse practice we've had," Florida A&M head football coach Rudy Hubbard is fairly pleased with his team's performance so far in spring practice.

I felt that our defense did a better job than our offense today," Hubbard said Thursday "Yesterday, our offense looked real good. It's been an up and down type thing

One of the areas Hubbard is pleased with is the play and numbers, of the offenuve line, a deep concern last year. "I'm really glad to say we don't have an offensive line problem this year," Hubbard said with a "We got some guys who are really doing the job."

One of the players is Randali Godwin, who was switched to left tackle this spring. after playing defensive tackle last year "Godwin's been doing a fine job this spring," Hubbard said. Godwin is listed. with the first unit.

Sophomore-to-be Vernice Smith has also caught Hubbard's eve with his aggressive play at right guard. "He's a full-speed kind. of player," Hubbard said. "He was one of our top recruits last year, and now he's become very consistent. But the big thing is he goes at it full-speed.11

The rest of the first unit (as of Thursday) offensive line has Stan Knighton at left guard Herman Hargrett at center, and

At the all-important quarterback spot, senior-to-be Mike Kelly has a firm grasp on the starting job, "He's clearly number one," Hubbard said. "Now there's a battle going on for the backup spot between Carl Williams and Harold Vinson Carl has the strong arm-probably the strongest of anybods out there-but Harold knows what to do."

With All-World receiver Ray Alexander now graduated. Hubbard knows that Kelly doesn't have a superior receiver to connect with, but is not fazed. 'What it is, is that we knew this day would come, and we didn't miss a step," Hubbard said "The other receivers are not on Alexander's level, but they're capable of doing a good job.

Right now. Billy Wilson and Lewis Bennett have the starting jobs, but like practically every other position in the spring, it is not a definite situation. Robert Gentile has impressed me, too," Hubbard said. "If we were to play in five minutes, he would not start, but he'd see a lot of action because we substitute a lot at that position."

For the rest of the backfield, Tony Barber has a lock on the tailback position, while Charles Bevel was moved back to his old position at full back. "We just wanted to see what he could do at tailback, Hubbard said

Sloan's 1983-84 team jumped from 10th in the southeastern Conference the previous season to third, the biggest turn around in league history. The squad finished 16-13 and made an NIT appearance

Ginny Foat

Escape from a violent cycle

BY FILEEN DRENNEN

By 1983, Ginny Foat was firmly convinced she'd left her past behind her

At 41, she was president of California's National Organization for Women — the fifth largest state chapter in the nation and one of the most powerful. She was respected, admired and sought after. Politicians vied for her suppose.

Regarded as a skilled and charismatic organizer who had ascended rapidly in the women's movement and would doubtless be around for a long time, Cinny Foat was, in 1983, not a woman you'd think of as a battered wife

But she had been, she said in an interview last week, from the time she hooked up with Jack Sidote in 1965 until she left him in 1970. And his revenge reached all the way across the country, from New York to California, when he implicated her in a confession to Albany, N.Y. police and twice had her brought in on murder charges — first in 1977 and again in 1983.

In Tallahassee to talk about her heavily publicated trial and subsequent acquittal last year for the 1965 murder of Argentine businessman Moises Chayo, Foat said her trial was more than a good example of how women are still treated unequally and unfairly in America — it was Jack Sidote's last punch.

"He could no longer beat or batter me," said Foat. "But he could use the American justice system to abuse me."

Foat's nightmare began on the morning of Jan 11, 1983, She was driving her friend and attorney Kay Tisenin to the Burbank airport for a flight to San Francisco. As was her habit when driving to airports late, she drove fase, so Tsenin kept watch out the back window for police. They didn't see any until they got to the airport. There, however, LAPD officers were everywhere. On the roof of the terminal, circling overhead in a helicopter, everywhere the eye turned. And the press was there, too.

"We thought they'd cornered a gang of international terrorists," said Foat of the scene, "or Reaganista" had decided to spend another weekend at his ranch."

But they were there for Foat. The charge

It's Springtime!

In Tallahasse that means any number of things: Dogwoods in bloom, trips to St. George and the sinks, baseball and, of course, hoopskirts and Andrew Jackson impersonations. That's right, it's Springtime Tallahassee, the city's annual celebration of rebirth. But don't go looking for any fertility rites, son—not here in the New South, not anymore. Find strength in what remains behind: Read Flambeau staff writer D.K. Robert's story on Saturday's Springtime Tallahassee parade on page 12.

A Writer's Fest diary

BY D.K. ROBERTS

The Festival of Writers, Thursday, 5 April, 8 p.m. A new collage—a new text

The Shakespeare canon is like the Koran you don't play with it, you don't change it

An iconoclast in the garden: Richard Schechner of New York University dares to tear down the temple. He wants to dismantle Shakespeare to get at the bones of story. He has been accused of "violating" works. But what he does is see that a piece of art is open, not sealed, that the act of making art is fluid, not static. Tests are made to be subverted. He is a teacher, a writer (books on anthropology and drama, The End of Humanism, performance theory), a director, a deconstructionist.

He explains deconstructionism as "a writer's comment on a writer." He differentiates it, as a director, from simply transferring a play from page to stage. A deconstruction is a revision. Schechner has done a Mucbeth where hands metamorphose into knives. His Lear is directed by Richard III. Regan and Goneril are punk princesses and Lear is a woman in a mask.

Scandalizing some of the audience, Schechner gets the second loveliest miracle of a Tallahassee spring, the annual writing conference, off to a deep-read, light-charged start.

Friday, 6 April, 2 p.m.. They fell in love with me the minute they laid eyes on each other

Barbara Milton belongs in the Longmire salon. Her open, fair face, her fine schoolgirl hair, her lilac voice, her cut-glass words, her furious decorous short stories—all about her lives well with the good old wood and the rose-and-cream rosetted ceiling and the Morris-blossomed carpet and the high windows. A beautiful room for beyond—beautiful writing.

Her piece "Promiscuity" is full of dancing oxymora and exquisite indecision. It's a feast of canape word-lists, of filigree incongruity. "She told all her lovers she had five diamonds."

"Menage" is about a collusion of women and houses, of a landlord of humors and catholic tastes. And the last story Barbara Milron reads is about a not-affair between a woman of sharp delicacy and a fancier of hats: "He was always trying to pikh my hats." Barbara Milron makes of fragmentation something so real and right that every word she writes rings true as a Waterford bell but big as a tower chime. Her stories are about the smallnesses of apartments and desks and friends but they are in never inconsequential. They are as important as a crescent moon and a summer sea.

Pennsylvania primary is up for grabs

ENTED PRING INTERNATIONAL

PHILADELPHIA—Walter Mondale, Gary Hart and Jesse Jackson intensified their battle for Pennsylvania Sunday as polls and most experts said Tuesday's critical primary is too close to call

The campaign for Pennsylvania's 172 convention delegates is the last contest in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination before the Texas caucuses May 5, giving the winner a long time to capitalize on his victory.

Pennsylvania has a politically volatile reputation. In 1976 it gave Jimmy Carter the big industrial state victory he needed to block all remaining challengers for the nomination. But in 1980, Sen. Edward Kennedy came close enough to Carter to continue to challenge the incumbent president all the way to the Democratic convention.

State political leaders say the race is too close to call, even though many have endorsed Mondale. Much will depend on how big a vote Jackson draws in Philadelphia, where black Mayor Wilson Goode has endorsed the former vice president.

An ABC Washington Post poll tracking the vote Thursday through Saturday gave Mondale 42 percent, Hart 39 percent and Jackson 13 percent, with 5 percent undexided. The margin of error is 5 percent.

The latest nationwide count by United Press International shows Mondale has 946 of the 1,967 delegates needed for nomination, Hart 545 and Jackson 152, with 358 uncommitted.

Mondale won easily in Wisconsin's Democratic caucuses Saturday—with 123 of the 126 caucuses reporting, Mondale got 57 percent of the vote and 47 delegates. Hart followed with 30 percent of the vote, and 23 delegates. Jack son got 11 percent of the vote and no delegates

Hart narrowly won Wisconsin's "beauty contest" primary last Tuesday

Mondale stood in the shadow of the crippled Three Mile Island nuclear power plant and told a cheering crowd the facility "should not be allowed to reopen."

Hart, speaking there a couple of weeks ago, said the plant should reopen only if certain unspecified conditions are met—failing to please the residents who wanted a definitive statement.

Mondale said he was speaking only of the Three Msie Island plant and that current nuclear plants should be able to continue running based upon their safety record.

Hart, in East Conemaugh, Pa., boasted of having a strong labor voting record, but told a group of unemployed steel workers, "I am not going to jump every time the leadership of the AFL-CIO Jerks my chain."

Earlier, in an appearance on CBS' Face the Nation, Hart was highly critical of President Reagan's foreign policy and said neither Reagan nor "too many Democrats" had "learned anything from Vietnam."

In Philadelphia, Jackson aimed his message at peace activists and the poor, trying to prove himself not just a magnet for black pride but a candidate for all.

He said the massive black turnout for last week's primary in New York is no "isolated vote."

"When blacks vote en masse, progressive white allies can win, women can win, Latinos can win—everyone can win peace, jobs, justice," Jackson said. D103 - Bullwinkle's bring you

The crash, which killed a 9-year-old boy and his 12year-old sister, occurred at accident-prone Los Rodeos Airport at Santa Cruz de Tenerife in the Canary Islands, which in 1977 was the site of the world's worst air disaster

MOSCOW - Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko charged Sunday the United States has blocked any chance of renewed East-West dialogue by its uncompromising policies on nuclear arms, chemical warfare and weapons in space. # Where to?

The news this past weekend that the Reagan administration is making contingency plans for waging a war in Central America came as no real surprise. Previously, administration figures had denied Reagan was considering committing U.S. combat troops to the battle against revolution in Central America, but given the thrust of U.S. policy in the region these days, it seemed safe to assume those denials were, well, disingenous. For one thing, the Pentagon regularly makes contingency plans for wars all over the world - one never knows, after all.

Besides. Reagan has made it clear all along that he is willing to go to almost any length to protect the "friendly" governments in the region. He's dispatched the CIA to help contra guerrillas, many of them former members of the hated Anastasio Somoza's national guard, destabilize Nicaragua; according to CBS news, that aid extends to the direct supervision by CIA agents of laying mines in Nicaraguan harbors

Consider too, the joint U.S.-Honduran military exercises which have been underway for a year. The official excuse for those exercises - the training of Honduran soldiers to resist Nicaraguan aggression ts only part of the story. The mission will also provide the U.S. with a body of troops and commanders who know their way around the region and how to fight a war there. And don't expect the U.S. presence in Honduras to end any time soon - the "senior" administration officials who told The New York Times about the contingency plans said they expect to keep about 2,000 American soldiers in Honduras permanently to maintain equipment and gather intelligence

The question is not whether the U.S. will become directly involved in a Central American war - we already are - but the degree of escalation the president is prepared to accept.

What's really interesting about the disclosure of the contingency plans, then, is not that they exist, but the manner in which their existence was made known. The Times sources were unnamed, but it's fair to assume they are pretty close to the president, and that they had his permission to talk to reporters about the matter. The Times' use of the word "senior" to describe its sources is the clue; the word is shorthand for very highly placed sources - cabinet officers, White House inner guard and in some cases presidents have spoken to reporters as "senior" officials.

The disclosure is also convenient for a president faced with near insurrection in Congress, where many are questioning the wisdom of Reagan's whole approach to the region and its problems. Queasy about sending more guns and bombs to El Salvador? Nervous about the CIA's "covert" war against Nicaragua? Well, Reagan is saying, it could get worse. Better go along now, or you'll face worse in the future. He's betting that his critics in Congress will balk at the prospect of a "red" Central America, should the need for an American combat force arise - even if that means sending "our boys" to fight.

But is that a safe bet? Not necessarily. It's becoming increasingly obvious - even in Congress - that Reagan's world view - and therefore his foreign policies - bear little relationship to reality.

Latin American revolution is not imported from Moscow. It is the inevitable result of a century of economic and political repression, perpetrated by local oligarchies which were aided and abetted by American corporations and the U.S. government. The revolutions won't stop until the repression does. And not once has Reagan indicated any serious interest in exerting the United States' influence to force the oligarchies to stop murdering and exploiting their peoples. Not even a hemispheric war will change that.

Bear that in mind as this election year rolls on. We understand that many people find Reagan a charismatic, inspiring leader. We hope they'll give some thought to where he's leading them.

Defending Hart

Dr Manning Marable's remarks on Gary Hart were both flippant and unfair, and they deserve a

Dr. Marable makes much of Hart's advocacy of an annual defense spending increase of four to five percent, but he excludes some important features of Hart's position. Hart opposes the new boondoggle. weapons that so infatuate the Reagan Administration. He supports the bilateral nuclear freeze proposal. He advocates a new military strateey that stresses troop mobility over enormous concentrations of firepower on specific targets-a proposition that could save money and lives. Hart has pledged to pull U.S. troops out of Honduras, and he has insisted that we not be caught fighting and dying for West German oil in the Persian Gulf

As to Hart's proposed defense spending increase, two points should be made. First, Hart has already said that a large percentage of this spending will go toward salary increases for military personnel Second, does Dr. Marable think that something along the line of a McGovern-styled 25 percent decrease in defense expenditures is in the realm of political possibilities? Local constituencies with defense-related industries are powerful persuaders to legislators seeking re-election. Or does Dr. Marchle think one gets nuclear freeze legislation through both houses with a smile and good

Concerning Hart's opposition to the Chrysler bailout, Hart believes this approach to be selective, and therefore, wrongheaded. If the problem is one that effects a whole industry or a number of industries then the solution must be a more comprehensive one than a single loan to one auto manufacturer. Chrysler workers weren't the only unemployed workers. And really, what's to guarantee that two or three years from now those same workers won't be back on the street because, as Dr. Marable probably knows, the real, structural problems were never addressed? If support for the Chrysler bailout is going to be applied as a litmus test of liberalism, then liberalism is going to become synonomous with gimerack solutions.

When Dr Marable accuses Hart of propagandizing the myth of the free market, the same accusation could have and should have been leveled at all the Democratic candidates. Look, all good liberals see the state as the Great Legitimator. providing a congenial social climate for capital accumulation. I'll ignore the fact that we've socialized the costs of production while retaining the gains of production in private hands. To single out Hart's "new ideas" for attack is to let the other Democrats off scot-free I wish Dr. Marable had presented a better reasoned and fairer argument

Lab animals

I am writing in response to Timothy Deagan's letter, "Ignorant Critics" (Wednesday, March 28) Mr Deagan undermined his credibility on the subject of vivisection by making inaccurate generalizations. I would like to clarify that humans are being used in experiments today and it is not forbidden by law to do such, contrary to what Mr Deagan may think. Among those under utilization as human guinea pigs are: mental defectives. mentally sick, prison inmates, the dying, the elderly, experimenters themselves, non-patient volunteers, patients awaiting operations and patients with specific ailments such as heart and kidney disease. (Kennth Mallanby: Human Guinea Pigs.) Utilization of lab animals is not vital.

Secondly, there are alternatives. As opposed to using whole animals, there are bacteria tests to screen for carcinogens, tissue cultures for work on cancer, and isolated cells from a particular system as opposed to an entire system to show effects of substances. There are also computers in which to analyze substances and video tapes in which to show documentation of research procedures and results. Alternate methods are required by law and have been proven effective in England, West Germany, Denmark, Switzerland and Sweden (Leon County Humane Society). Are this country's researchers not humanitarian enough to use these alternate methods?

Anyone in the community who is concerned about the issue and would like to help, please contact the Leon County Humane Society (P.O.Box 2033), or L.C.H.S. Spay and Neuter Clinic on 939 West Tharpe Street (386-4148). Petitions are available for circulation at both facilities.

Senator Dole (R-Kan), backed by 20 other senators, has proposed an amendment to the Animal Welfare Act. This amendment, called Dole's Law (S. 657), has been confirmed by the American Institute of Biological Sciences to be "a logical approach to ensuring good quality, humane care and treatment of laboratory animals." Let us hope that the humanitarians in the United States Congress can pass it.

was murder, and the star witness — indeed, the only witness — was exhusband Jack Sidote

She had been through all this before, Foat thought, in 1977 when Sidote first implicated her in two murders he said occurred when they travelled across the country together in the mid-'60s - Chayo in New Orleans and Donald Fitting in Lake Tahoe. She had been questioned in Nevada about Fitting's murder and released because of insufficient evidence Sidote had decided not to testify so Nevada had no case against Foat and dropped the charges Louisiana followed suit, also deciding not to prosecute for lack of evidence Foat returned to California free and, she thought, finally rid of Sidote, who was sentenced to 25 years in Nevada for Fitting's death

Yet here were the same charges she had been cleared of in 1977. It was a full-blown political spectacle. Sidote was reads to testify against her. She was to go to trial for Chayo's murder in Louissana.

But why? How?

Foat doesn't yet know all the answers, and doubtless won't know much until a lawsuit she filed against Shelly Mandell — the political rival who brought the Louissiana police to her door — comes to tual. She has theories about FBI involvement and has aimed her lawsuit not only at Mandell but at "25 co-conspirators."

She believes Sidote may have just been a small cog in a large machine against her, but is convinced that his participation is just another chapter in the vengeful battle he has wared against her since she left him in 1970.

Foat thinks her story is like that of most battered women — she just got more publicity because of her prominence and the nature of her husband's attack

"I grew up in the '50s in a Catholic Italian conservative family, and there was not any talk of my going to college," said Foat. "It was that I would get married and the most important thing would be for me maybe to go to secretarial school. There was never any talk of my education or that I could become president of the United States.

"I bought that and married right out of high school, and divorced right out of high school, too And when I was 24 years old I met this crazy person who filled what was supposed to be the image of that time and who now very clearly in retrospect fills the image of a batterer — that jealous, possessive, strong macho male." Jack Sidote

She fell in love with him in 1965. He tended bar at the Villa Lipani's motel bar the Driftwood Lounge in New Paltz, N Y He was "a charmer" who sometimes stole the mike to sing a few tunes with the band. A short, muscular ex Manne, Sidote reminded regular bar patrons of "a white Sammy Davis, Jr.," wrote Teresa Carpenter in the Village Voice Goat - Ginny Galluzzo at the time - worked in a car rental agency across the Hudson River in Poughkeepsie. Her first marriage to "handsome New Paltz football player Danny Angelillo" had recently been annulled. They had drifted apart, she told Life magazine, after she began involving herself more and more in civil rights work.

Foat began going to the Driftwood regularly to unwind after work. Sidote began noticing her. He described her years later to New York state police as "a very statuesque girl, very high fashion dresser, modelish type."

His attentions were not lost on her. In fact, they began to mean a lot "The minute I walked in Villa Lipant," Foat told Life, "Jack would pour me a Cutty on the rocks, pick up the mike and sing, 'There Will Never Be Another You."

Sidote was married at the time, but the two began to see more and more of each other. He took her to expensive restaurants in New York City and treated her well. It wasn't until they took off together for Florida that Foat saw the darker side of Jack Sidote. Somewhere in North Carolina she made a this is the same in all battering cases — and says it will never happen again, it's an isolated incident. And so that first incident is an isolated incident. And then it happens again. But, of course, it's still an isolated incident and you still haven't told anyone about it. And it progressively gets worse and worse. By that time, he has psychologically done a number of things.

"He has, number one, isolated you from friends and family and he, number two, has convinced you that it's your fault. If only you had done the drishes better, there would

'He said he would see me dead or in prison and that I would never be free of him. Seven years later he made good on his claim. He could no longer beat or batter me, but he could use the American justice system to abuse me.'

critical remark about his driving. He stopped the car, grabbed her from the seat and slammed her against the car. He told her "between torrents of obscenity," to keep her mouth shut. She did, said Foat, and remained silent for the rest of the trip.

"When you get into a battering situation, you have to really understand the dynamics that happen," said Foat. "I think people have this stereotype that the woman must be enjoying it to stay — she must be some sort of massechist. But I think that what happens is you get to a point where you let it happen the first time and you become so embarrassed that it happened and you didn't say anything because he immediately apologizes — and be no need for him to get upset, because he had this horrible day at the office or at work or wherever and he came home and here was this sink full of greasy dishes. If you only hadn't done that it wouldn't have set him off So you make little lists of all the things you're going to change and it just keeps progressing like that

"Batterers carry this long hatred The woman becomes responsible for every ill in his life. And so it depends on what happens to the batterer. If he goes on and finds another woman to abuse or if he gets help of some sort, then the woman is a little bit safer.

"If the batterer goes on to become, as my ex-husband did, even a worse alcoholic, to be more involved in crime, to do all of those things, then I become responsible for everything that goes wrong in his life."

Sidote was an alcoholis, and he drank heavily throughout their time together. They travelled across the country, Foat working at a variety of low-paying jobs, and Sidote drinking. In Los Angeles in 1966 they managed to hook up with another couple and purchase a bar called "No Regrets." Things went well for a short time until the next year when Sidote—who had always been fond of pistols—shot an unruly customer he had chased out of the bar and killed him. He spent three years of a 15-year maximum sentence in California's state piison at Chino, and was pareled in 1970.

Foat had decided to leave him for good, and asked him for a divorce

"I knew when it was time for him to be released, and he was starting to come home on a work furlough program, that I could not go back to that life, and I couldn't deal with him anymore and his sickness and I couldn't help his sickness anymore and I decided to leave," said Foat

"In July of 1974, he attempted to kill me, and had it not been for a roommate walking in, I would be dead now," she said. "I escaped from him and as he ran out of the house in his frenzy, he was yelling that he would never be free of him. Seven years later he made good on his claim."

Foat traces her involvement with the women's movement back to 1974 when she sisted a battered wives shelter in Santa Ana, Calif. She was reminded of her life with Sidote. "I suddenly realized I wasn't alone," she told. Life magazine. "There were thousands of other women who shared my shame."

"An interesting thing battered women do is a whole denial," said Foat. "The most difficult thing for me this year was talking about it. I had never talked to anybody about it. In all my involvement I had never gotten directly involved with a battered women's shelter. I'd helped taise inoney or been very peripherally involved in various issues but never worked with any battered women because it was just too difficult to face within myself."

"I'm in the process now of going through a volunteer program at a battered women's shelter in California, which is the first time I will actually face it in the community other than on an intellectual level," said Foat. "That's scary for me getting back in touch with some of those feelings. What I've found through books and talking with people in the movement is that my story and what I have experienced could be the story of anyone."

Foat has recently organized legal Advocates for Women—a group that will aid other women—who find themselves caught up in the criminal justice system," with money, educational material and research. She wants to be able to offer women the advantage of statistics on battering husbands and then habits that she didn't base.

Foat hopes her experience can go towards helping other women. Change, she teels, has to start early, with the young. They shouldn't grow up with the rigid sterotypes she did, that made her think abusive behavior is somehow acceptable.

"To make change is revolutionary," she told a small crowd in Florida State University's Diffenbaugh building Thursday night.

"I ask all of you to join in the revolution, because that's what we need to have."

Panel offers S.G. its advice

Florida State University's Government Student Advisory Committee is a relatively new effort to bridge the gap between student government and students

Some of the advisory committee's current projects are lobbying for a paved bike path to the Seminole Reservation and working towards a better Homecoming for next year

The advisory committee is also in the process of reviewing student service agencies on campus. The committee began examining the Inter-Residence Hall Council in January and is expected to pass a resolution endorsing more collective power

We think that IRHC could be a much stronger, more effective agency," Advisory Committee chair John Costello said "We think that there could be a lot more interaction between the dorms instead of just between the dorm governments. I think that there could be more new programs instituted in the dorms." He did not offer any specific proposals for those programs.

A resolution will be brought before the Student Senate Wednesday concerning the advisory committee's investigation into student senators' commitment to their respective schools

"I wanted to start it as a 'Foot the door' committee people to find out what's going on in S.G."

-Sen. B. Wilson

"We'd like to see the senators moving closer to the students that they're supposed representing "

Costello said that the committee suggests the placement of information table staffed by senators at each school Other ideas include a signboard listing the names and phone numbers of the students' representatives in the senate

Three other resolutions will be brought before the senate on Wednesday by the advisory committee, Costello said. One resolution concerns the formation of a home-town news release service commending students for their activities at FSU Costello said the service will not cater to senators and student government leaders, but will try to cover the achievements of students involved in smaller projects as well

Another resolution will concern the development of closer ties with in-coming students.

"Through the use of personal letters from student government leaders and committee members, we would like to address new students more personally than in the past," Costello said. "We'd like to tell them a little bit about what's going on at Florida State University and in the student government before they get on

Find the bottom line for the defense budget

BY EARL C. RAVENAL PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE

From time to time, even the most fervent of those dedicated to cutting the defense budget succumb to dispair. They are daunted by the prospect of "micromanaging" — second-guessing the Pentagon on every detail of specification, procurement, expenditure and deployment.

So, unable to determine the relationships that produce the large aggregates of defense apending, they retreat into what has been called "fiscal guidance"

With fiscal guidance, you "put an arbitrary limit on the amount of available money and its rate of growth, and just tell the practitioners to do the best they can," said Alice M. Rivlin, outgoing director of the Congressional Budget Office More directly, she said, "The best rule for politicians for dealing with generals (and) admirals may be this — put the money on the stump and run."

The problem with this approach is threefold

•First, any savings that might be achieved by simply cutting expenditures by a fixed percentage — especially in an area so vital as "national security" — will be transient, sure to be overtaken by some supposed "threat" or some demonstrated "shortfall in meeting requirements

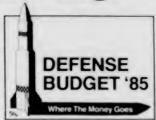

•Second, the military force structures and weapons systems that result from this process likely will represent a gross mismatch between defensive capabilities and offensive challenges or the requirements of existing alliances. No one will long be satisfied — not defense planners, nor executive branch politicians, nor U.S. allies

•Third, more far-reaching problems in the long-term defensive stance of the United States — its deterrent strategy, its alliance commitments — can never be addressed by such a superficial procedure as "tiscal guidance."

Thus, the arbitrary measures desperately conceived to cap the rise in defense spending will not work. What is needed is an analysis that shows a true "bottom line"—that derives the dollar value of defense programs from data on major weapons systems, forces and doctrines and tactics, and in turn from military strategies and foreign policies.

Only in this way can we identify the policies that require particular levels of commitment. Only in this way can we know what to change in order to secure some less expensive policy, if that is what we seek.

Military budget-cutters should begin by determining "where the money is" - that is, what missions and functions are responsible for the major categories and amounts of defense spending. To facilitate this, I offer a way to relate defense expenditures to large-scale "national strategies" and ultimately to foreign policies.

First in a series

This method allows us to attribute defense expenditures to the major components of the military services and, more important, to the regions we are committed to defend. The dollar figures used here are taken from the Reagan administration's initially proposed fiscal 1983 defense budget authorization. Though that request for $305 billion may be cut later by Congress by about 5 percent, the $305 billion figure will serve quite well for this analysis.

Strategic nuclear forces, including their full share of military support costs and Pentagon overheads, come to about $70 billion, or 23 percent of the 1985 authorization request All the rest — 77 percent or $235 billion — is dedicated to "General Purpose Forces" land divisions (Army and Marine Corps), tactical air wings and the Navy's surface fleets.

In terms of regions, I judge that for fiscal 1985, the Reagan administration intends to attribute our 20 active ground divisions as follows. NATO-Europe, 11 divisions, East Asia, four divisions, other regions and the Strategic Reserve, five divisions.

We can, then, provide rough estimates of the cost of our regional commitments. By using this ratio of divisions to divide up the $235 billion devoted to General Purpose Forces, we find that Europe will continue to be the main beneficiary of American defense resources, accounting for $129 billion. Asia will absorb $47 billion. And an expanded requirement for the Rapid Deployment Force, mostly aimed at the Persian Gulf, will take $59 billion.

If it does nothing else, this anatomy lesson ought to demonstrate that defense budgets are not for nothing; they are for Turn to DEFENSE, page 10 Ask one of the 3 million Americans who've survived cancer, if the money spent on research is worth it.

The advisory committee is also advocating the initiation of "one-on-one" contact with students at registration and drop/add. Committee members could hand out questionaires and information to students during registration in the fall, Costello said. A table in the Civic Center would really be ineffective, he said - the person-to-person approach is a much better way to relate to the students

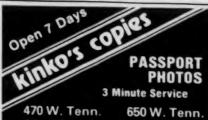

The Student Government Advisory Committee was formed by Sen. Brian Wilson in January. It has 14 standing members. Most had no prior involvement with student government

"I was a little skeptical about the committee's success in the beginning," Wilson said, "I wanted to start the project as a kind of 'foot in the door' committee for people who wanted to find out what's going on in student government "

Costello sees the work of the Advisory Committee this semester as a foundation for expansion in the fall. Even though the members of the committe don't hold official SG titles, through their involvement with the committee, the students can make a difference, said Costello.

"It's refreshing to see students becoming involved with and informed about SG," Wilson said. "The committee is a good way to learn the procedures of student government as well as being good experience for anyone who decides to get further involved with S.G. later."

Anyone interested in the Student Government Advisory Committee is invited to attend one of its meetings on Thursday afternoons at 246 Union, or contact John Costello at 644-4984 something. The dollars buy forces; the forces have missions; the missions are in regions where the United States has defensive commitments or supposed strategic interest; the strategic involvements, in sum; are practically equivalent to the nation's foreign policy.

Therefore, defense budgets cannot be cut significantly — on a scale commensurate with our federal deficit problem — without consequences for our alliances and our foreign policies. Those who would cut must decide what they would have us do without.

This predicament cannot be resolved in a few budget sessions. It involves nothing less than the dilemma of a mature "imperial" power, facing multiple challenges but unable to generate sufficient resources for the defense of its extensive perimeter. The question ia, "Will U.S. leaders have the vision and courage to go beyond minor and superficial adjustments and confront questions of national strategy?"

Over four decades, this national strategy has consisted of two basic elements, both devoted to containing communist power and influence: deterrence, and

Deterrence is roughly equated with our strategic nuclear forces: We seek to maintain a balance — or better — of strategic nuclear arms with the Soviet Union, and to provide a nuclear umbrella over our allies and various other countries.

Forward defense, or alliance, involves protecting — mostly with General Purpose Forces — our allies and other countries that occupy strategic positions or have sympathetic social and political systems.

With nuclear forces, the Reagan administration is simply affirming our traditional strategy of "extended deterrence." That is, the suckear weapons are used to deter all kinds of threats, conventional and nuclear, to our ailies and ourselves and to other subjects, even of less than truly "vital" interest. This strategy of extended deterrence in turn has motivated our move to counterforce targeting, which is bound up with our retaining the option to use nuclear weapons first.

Extended deterrence is, in fact, the ground on which both elements of U.S. strategy, deterrence and alliance, come together. For by committing the United States to the defense of numerous allies and clients abroad — thereby stretching the capacities of our General Purpose Forces to the breaking point — U.S. strategy, over four decades, has relied on threats of nuclear retaliation to close the breach.

Thus extended deterrence is at the heart of America's strategic dilemma. It is not a superficial or a novel element of the Reagan administration's strategic stance. And since it is not the product of rhetoric, it is not a likely candidate for merely rhetorical remedies.

Critics say the Reagan policies have unacceptable consequences for the economy and unacceptable implications in terms of military confrontation. But what is really wrong with the Reagan version of the U.S. strategic paradigm is what has been wrong with the American paradigm itself for the past 40 years — the reliance on nuclear threats to buttress an overextended structure of global commitments.

Thus, the task now is to transcend partisan rhetoric and to find a real and major alternative to the framework of deterrence and alliance that has become so burdensome and unstable.

The writer, a former official of the Department of Defense, is a professor of International Relations at Georgetown University.

Reagan's blast at Congress may backfire

UNITED PRENS INTERNATIONA

WASHINGTON — In his latest call for bipartisanship in foreign policy. President Reagan struck an accusatory tone that sets the stage for further confrontation with Congress and adds fuel to the debate of the campaign.

Top White House officials contend Reagan, in his broad discussions of foreign policy over the last week, has set "a benchmark" for the campaign and extended an olive branch to Congress.

But the underlying message of his comments in a primetime news conference, a major foreign policy speech two days later and his regular paid political radio broadcast Saturday, was unmistakenly clear.

Beneath his concern for presidential prerogatives and desire that the U.S. government speak with a single voice, Reagan blamed Congress for failure in Lebanon and hinted a similar charge may be looming in Central America.

The finger-pointing was more subtle than the statements offered by some of his top nides and advisers. But it brought the question of "Who lost Lebanon?" into the political arena — perhaps achieving just what he had sought to avoid.

During his Wednesday evening news conference, Reagan fired a shot at Congress that shattered a defactor rhetorical cease-fire on Lebanon. Democratis were in a poor position to turn Lebanon into a campaign issue after giving Reagan an 18-month mandate to keep the Marines in Beirut. Reagan seemed content to not press the point — at least until last week.

Then why the administration offensive?

ANALYSIS

In private, senior officials talk of disappointment over the course of events in Lebanon. Secretary of State George Shultz acknowledged the failure cost the United States credibility in one of the most strategic areas of the world.

Adding to the disappointment over Lebanon, the officials said, was a building sense of frustration over Central America — the inability to convince Congress of the urgency of the situation even after embracing the recommendations of the much-touted Kushner commission.

Together, the weight of Lebanon and Central America led the administration to lash out at Congress. The response from Capitol Hill was even more pointed, drowning out Reagan's invitation for Congress to participate in the formulation of foreign policy, then keep quiet once presidential decisions have been made.

Reagan's postulate that partisan wrangling stops "at the water's edge" was hardly unique

The chief architect of this view was Sen. Arthur Vandenberg, R-Mich. Since Vandenberg first coined the phrase in 1950, the cliche has been invoked by a succession of presidents faced with congressional resistance to their policies.

But in suggesting partisan politics defeated his policy in Lebanon, Reagan undermined his own pitch for greater cooperation and may have ripped open a wound that had just begun to heal.

Former Senator Frank Church Dead

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Former Democratic Sen. Frank Church of Idaho died Saturday at his Bethesda, Maryland home. The 59-year-old Church, who ran unsuccessfully for the presidency in 1976, had been undergoing chemotherapy for cancer of the pancreas.

Church served for 24 years in the senate before losing his seat to Republican Steven Symms during the 1980 election that brought Ronald Reagan to the presidency During his years in the Senate, Church was a vocal liberal, supporting civil rights legislation, expanded social service programs and equal rights for women.

In 1966, Church broke with the Johnson administration by opposing the war in Southeast Asia, and he continued to oppose the war from the Senate floor. He twice sponsored measures to limit or end American involvement in the war — in 1970, a bill to prohibit further use of U.S. troops in Cambodia, and in 1972, a bill to end all American military activities in Southeast Asia.

In 1975, Church chaired the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence which cited the FBI and the CIA for illegal wire-taps, break-ins, assassination plots against foreign leaders, and campaigns to discredit civil-rights activities.

Forche: Riveting images that linger

BY JON SCOTT

Carolyn Forche's posetry blasts into her reader's psyche like a machine gun with tight, controlled images: Salvadoran prisoners locked in boxes the size of washing machines; a Salvadoran colonel who empties a sack of severed human ears on a dining room table.

In nearly journalistic style, the award-winning poet and historian draws the reader into a world as loving as her Crech grandmother and as horrifying as dismembered corpses in Central America.

Saturday night, reading as part of Florida State University's Spring Festival of Writers — Forche brought that world to Tallahassee before a crowd of 200

Forche has taught at San Diego State University and won the Yale Series of Younger Poets Award and the Lamont Poetry Prize for volumes of her works but she says partial credit belongs to her grandmother Anna

It was Anna who inspired Forche to write her first poem,

Carolyn Forche

Florida Flambeau/Bob O'Lary

Burning the Tomato Worms. Anna loved to burn worms from tomato stalks with kitchen matches and watch them "belly dance," Forche said.

She would clap her hands and laugh as the worms turned black and exploded," Forche said.

Anna died and Forche left Detroit for ten years. When she returned, she found the city "looked a little bit like Belfast without troops"

If Detroit looked like a war zone, Forche saw the real thing when she spent two years in El Salvador. She first went there and became involved with the country's problems before Central America had become a major issue in the United States.

"It was simply very hard to say anything about El Salvador until the churchwomen were killed there," Forche said. She was referring to the four Americans killed, apparently by a right wing death squad connected to the military, in 1981.

Forche financed the Salvadoran trip with the Guggenhiem grant she won in 1978. She said she decided "you go to a poetic place like New England to write poetry," when a friend asked if she'd like to see America's next Vietnam from its beginnings. Forche accepted and became deeply involved in the plight of the people of El Salvador-Most of her reading Saturday night dealt with the atroctites which occur in that country.

She read of having dinner with a general who tossed a pouch across the dinner table, spilling human ears, dried like peach pits on the fine linen. The general took the ears and dropped a few into a glass of water. His dinner guests watched as the ears expanded and "came back to life."

As she read the room was silent but for the sometimes full and strong, sometimes whispering sound of her voice

Forche told of a volcano in El Salvador named Ezalco. In 1932, during a Salvadoran uprising that lasted three dusy and left between 30,000 and 80,000 people dead, Ezalco erupted. For three dasy people were covered with ashes. On the last day of the uprising the ashes stopped but a beautiful light glowed from Ezalco. The light continued to burn for years and Ezalco became known as the "lighthouse of the Pacific."

In the 1950s, Forche said the government, in hopes of promoting tourism in El Salvador, decided to build a hotel overlooking the trater of the volcano. The native Indians told them that Ezalco would "go to sleep" if the hotel was constructed.

On the day of its completion, there came a loud noise

They used to joust over on Colonial Drive. Only Colonial Drive wan't there and Sixth and Seventh weren't there—it was just a green valley where the Fallahassee lyricals held an antebellum medieval tournament to celebrate May Day (the olde Englishe one, not the International Socialist one). They had all read Sir Walter Scott back then and knew how to have a good time knightwise.

Degeneration. That's all in the world the abominable Springtime Tallahassee hoo-hah is. It's a vulgar, commercial bastardization of a May Festival. Springtime Tallahassee is just an opportunity for some feeble-excuses for an elite to play Mardi Gras and pretend they have elegant aristocratic krewes a la New Orleans.

That parade on Saturday After you got through the macho crap of police sirens wailing in your ears for 15 minutes and the spectacle of Governor Bob walking the route instead of riding in his car (is he practicing to be Jimmy Carter?) you had to endure the most tedious parade in living memory. This includes the Veteran's Day Parade which at least often has fascinating beavy artillery.

A military band played Sousa Badly The Godby High School band played "Hey, Look Me Over." Badly. The Spanish Territorial Governor came by and he looked pretty good only all the ladies with him seemed to have escaped via time machine into 1855. around here in 300 years? Then comes the float everybody likes the pre-war Statehood one, the period that conforms to everybody's ideas of that prelapsarian Southern Eden as seen in the first 30 minutes of Gone With the Wind. This year the krewe chose one of the most romantic subjects in all North Florida history—Prince Murat's grist mill.

Some nice stuff in between the travesties. The Captain, King and Queen of Sparta from New Orleans in glorious emerald silks and velvets. The Greenville High School Band—they were small but they sounded hort—playing "No Parking on the Dance Floor." Then there was the Florida High Band. Still looking dissolute and menacing, lots of the members in shades, not all fresh faced and Aryan eyed like the North Florida Christian bunch.

But really. Most of this parade was a pale shadow of what a parade (loud, fast, beautiful, flower-filled) should be I knew I couldn't stand it much longer when the 20th century float came by with a collection of geriatrics wriggling irrythmically in a space labelled "Peppermint Lounge" Ow.

Meanwhile, the crowd had got even ruder than before (do these same people go to baseball games?) and doing things like crossing the street smack in the middle of the parade, right in front of the Sunshine State Twirlers or Andrew Jackson's coonskin cap collective. I know what a May Pole stands for, but what does an Andrew Jackson in an ill fitting tail-coal symbolize?

Robert Hughes, controversial art critic for Time magazine and author narrator of Shock of the New, will lecture tonight at 8 on the Mainstage in the Florida State University Fine Arts Building

Hughes was originally scheduled to speak at FSU on March 29 but bad weather prevented planes from flying out of New York and kept him from the engagement.

His book, Shock of the New, covers everything from Futurist sketches to Joseph Cornell's "boxes" with numerous reproductions of both major and minor works It, and, since 1970, his criticism for Time, has won him both avid supporters an ardent detractors. Unlike the volcano, Forche's fire did not die out in El Salvador. She was in Beirut earlier this year covering the conflict for the National Public Radio until she was evacuated by the Marine's sixth fleet.

As of Saturday night she had completed a tour of 40 states in 18 months. The festival was her last stop, she told the audience. She was ready to stop traveling for a while and concentrate on writing new poetry.

O Known on Engelow State Balance That I congrave his 1984

BY MARTHA GEILS

Friday night entertainment for the local literati was Joyce Johnson's reading from her book, Minor Characters. A respectable number turned out to hear excerpts from her reminiscences of the Greenwich Village poets of the Beat Generation.

Johnson, now an editor at Doubleday, was associated with the Beat writers and poets in the 1950s. Her book is an insider's look at the colorful and many times tragic lives of the artists who came to be known as the Beats Generation.

Her initiation into the Greenwich Village crowd when she was 13 years old was described in the first chapter she read. In her words, the people she met were "real, exciting, dangerous and exotic. She read of her double life, weekdays at a private girls' high school in New York City and weekends at the Village

Her affiliation with the Beats continued. The second segment of her reading was a portrait of Johnson's life with Jack Kerouac in the mid-'50s. She gave an animated look at the man who wrote "The book of the Beat Generation" at the time when that book, On The Road, brought him fame.

In closing, Johnson read a well-rendered description of tenement life on New York's lower east side in the late 1950s. Her description of the not-so-beautifual aspects of tenement life and of the not-so-happy lives of the artists who lived there, reveals her as an insider here, experiencing more than just their days of fame

Saturday morning saw a different Joyce Johnson, an older, professional Johnson as she discussed the publisher's role in the panel discussion, "How Manuscripts Become

From the Beats to Doubleday

Books." Johnson, along with James Laughlin, founder and editor of New Directions, and Ricardo Pau-Llosa, a poet and senior editor of Art International, answered questions from Florida State University English professor David Kirby, the moderator, and from the audience

The discussion began with an examination of the editor's role in the publishing house. According to Laughlin and Johnson, who carried on the bulk of the conversation, that role varies greatly, depending on the size of the publishing

"In a small house," said Johnson, "the whole process is overseen by the editor, including the cover and brochures. In a big house, power is diffused." The consensus within the panel was that the optimal situation is one in which the editor has a great deal of control.

From there, the conversation turned to publishing houses, large versus small. Apparently, both have their merits, but Laughlin said it is the small presses which are "important to the future of serious publishing." Laughlin pointed out, however, that small presses must be chosen with caution "They (small presses) can be very efficient, but they can also be a very frustrating experience

At least with small houses, agents and letters of recommendation are not a must as they are with large houses As Johnson pointed out, speaking of Doubleday, "manuscripts from unknown, unsolicited authors are gone through quickly. Usually only the first pages are read. Then most of them are sent back

A discussion of the routes the various panel members followed on the way to becoming editors wrapped up the

Friday, 6 April, 8 p.m. Under the influence of literature has drunk celebratory champagne with Jack Kerouac She has seen the best minds of her George Cuomo and Barbara Miltor generation. She knows the generation. She knows the occult secrets of the Beats.

Joyce Johnson is an editor at Doubleday and a novelist and now she is famous for Minor Characters and it's the wrong reason. She should be famous because the book is charming and literate and bright instead of because it is about Consberg and Kerouse and Burroughs and the zenith of Greenwich Village

She reads Chapter One It is a miracle of how to write about cult-scons without name-dropping. She succeeds where a new play in London about TS Eliot's first marriage-Tom and Viv fails. Her story is good because it is sensitive and witty about teenagers in the late forties/early fifties confronting Trotskyite girls and black stockings and copper carrings and coffee and literature Tom and Fiv is bad because, except for those totemic names, all it's about is a seemingly commonplace couple with some inconvenient neuroses and a penchant for chocolate. Minor Characters would be a good book if Joyce Johnson had made every bit up. And in a sense writing is self-integration -she did.

Saturday, 7 April, 11:30 a m The bell rang. Dylan Thomas died of "an insult of the brain." James I aughlin, his publisher, had to go and identify him at the Bellevue Morgue.

James Laughlin has published 20th-century American poetry. The poetry. Ezra Pound, William Carlos Williams He has published Continental writers: Hesse, Lorca He founded New Directions to print what he liked and what was good and important and modernism is inconceivable without him. He is friendly and funny and self-deprecating. He tells stories. Williams' letters to Found telling him to get back to America where he belongs and Pound's answers to "Billiams" arguing for local color in Rapallo, Allen Ginsberg shoving unsigned poems into Williams' milk bottles in Patterson, New Jersey; partying in Chelsea with Dylan Thomas and Daphne, Marchioness of Bath. His stories are delightful. He enjoys himself and he enjoys literature. I only hope he will bring out his autobiography soon. It will be a kind of history of the important art of this century. Saturday, 2p.m.

First chapters should have elements of the whole novel First chapters should be first chapters because they set up the novel. George Cuomo has theories about first chapters

He reads us one. It's from his new (untitled, unpublished) novel It is set in 1849 and is about the continental feud between two actors, an American Shakespearean and an English Shakespearean. Cuomo says it is an historical novel. He uses a modified antique diction. This is hard to do As he reads he stumbles a little as if he's no more read it than we have. But this is how it is with a work in progress unfixed and unfamiliar and imminent Saturday, 3 30 p.m.

What do you write about? Do you write about what has happened to you? Do you make it up? Can you make it up? Sheila Taylor, Carolyn Forche, Barbara Milton, Joyce Johnson and George Cuomo talk about experience. Sheila Taylor uses James' idea of "a prick of innoculation." She asks if the writer is a sort of infected person. It is hard to talk about this. Joyce Johnson says that memory fictionalizes and that fiction can be true memory. Carolyn Forche says that you have to write what's true-Grace Paley told her that and it's not simple like it sounds. Harbara Milton says it is a great feeling for a writer when he finds out he can lie.

Saturday, 8 p.m. You were born to an island of greed and grace. Better people than you were powerless.

You cannot write political poetry without passion and personality and pain. Carolyn Forche won prizes for her work. And she lived in El Salvador. And she lived in She understands the volcano-places of the Letanon.

Her poems seem to ask if revolution, some revelation, is possible. They ask if an American can understand the places where violence is as daily as a sunrise. She is an artist-she does not deal in factionalist generalities but human specifics. She is like Yeats-all governments are

She has a tremulous, urgent, clear voice. She writes not just of Salvadoran colonels cascading cut-off ears ontoelegant dining tables, but white-lipsticked girls of herchildhood and her old home. The poem for her friend Victoria is a song of a Michigan princess with trophies of boot-camp letters and an old love and longing: "If you read this poem, write to me,/I have been to Paris since we parted '

The poem for her grandmother Anna, her muse, she says, is like Yeats' "Pardon old fathers" It is an apology for being a childless poet. It is a celebration of ancestral truth Carolyn Forche's poetry shimmers with vulnerability and courage and transcendant suffering in frustrated truth. That's what writing is good for

Do you know how long it takes any one voice to reach another?

A Beaver sequel and the work of Wilder

MONDAY

The Academy Awards - Personally, I don't give a flying for about who wins what, or why, at the Oscars, but I know a lot of people who do I've got better things to do, and besides, you can tell who's going to get what. It'll be either Terms of Endearment or Yentl, celluloid nightmares both, for darn near everything. Who needs it? Go see Robert Hughes instead, play "Parcheesi," anything It's your life, as the Kinks crooned, and you can do what you like (ABC, 9p.m.)

Still The Beaver - A nightmarish sequel to Leave it to Beaver, that idiot-box celebration of pre-Pleasant Valley Sunday Suburbia. Centering around popeyed ogre Jerry Mathers' adult re-creation of his role, it's a delight from the writers' point of view-whoever did it went haswire, inventing perverse epitaphs for all the characters, confirming long-time viewers' suspicions it e. Eddie Haskell (Ken Osmond) really does turn out to be vermin, Lumpy Rutherford (Frank Bank) will be harangued by Daddy (creepy Fred Deacon) all his life. The original series had its share of subtly bizarre moments, but this is just a jaw-dropper throughout Worth watching_ (CBS, 9 p.m.)

WEDNESDAY

Fedora—Bill Wilder's awful-but fascinating follow-up to his 1950 masterpiece, Sunset Boulevard, with William Holden as a Hollywood director coaxing a reclusive exstarlet out of hiding. Wilder lost it as a director sometime in the '70s-and his most recent films, especially 1981's Buddy Buddy, are proof he should just rest on his laurels For a few stray moments the old Wilder is at work here, and there's something magical about that (CBS, 12:40

MOVIES ON TV

SATURDAY

Zulu-Cy Endfield's 1964 hommage to Rudyard Kipling (A little late for that kind of thing); British soldiers (including Stanley Baker and Jack Hawkins) battling Africanwarnors. Too much fun to be truly anachronistic, sometimes things work that way (WTBS, cable 2, 10-35

The Man In The White Suit-One of Alex Guiness' best roles, as a much harried chemist who concocts a wonderfabric that's indestructible, never needs cleaning, and so on , Funny and a little peculiar, archetypal Faling Studios comedy fun (GPT, cable 14, 8 p.m.)

The Day of the Iriffids-Downbeat sci-fi about killer plants and how they wipe out Life On Earth As We Know Know It Unlike Nickelodeon to be showing this (art it ain't, but, then again, neither is most of this channel's fodder) (Nickelodeon, cable 22, 8 p.m., midnight)

Double Indemnity-One of Billy Wilder's and film noir's-finest is this 1944 adaptation of James M. Cain's pulp-novel classic. Written for the screen by Raymond Chandler, whose understanding of mood, dialogue, and the importance of silence certainly makes him one of the great screenwriters, and perfectly presented by Wilder, it's a completely American Nightmare. An insurance agent (Fred MacMurray) falls hard for a psychopathic woman (Barbara Stanwyck), helps her murder her husband, and bears the brunt of the consequences. Great performance by I dward G. Robinson tossed in for good measure, fine location footage of California, and Miklos Rosza's intense, driving music. A flawless film (not many exist, as you must know by now) (WCTV, cable 9, 11 30 p in )

Security will be tight at Oscar ceremonies

LOS ANGELES- The Oscar ceremons hs an estimated TV audience of 500 million worldwide, but many uninvited fans prefer to see the Academy Awards in person, the security chief for the event says

More than 500 guards, police officers, Sheriff's deputies and detectives from private agencies watch over the stars, but more importantly they keep intruders out of the downtown Dorothy Chandler Payslion where the awards ceremony will be held Monday.

Gate crashers have come up with some ingenious ways to foil Jerry Moon, security coordinator for the Academy Awards during the past 14 years.

This year, Moon, who is also the Disney Studio's yearround security chief, hired extra guards. A routine background check of one applicant revealed he was a professional photographer who planned to shoot before and during the ceremony, when all photo-taking is forbidden

"It would have been quite a coup to get shots of the set · before the broadcast," says Moon, who is also a minister and former LAPD officer.

Past intruders have been even more devious. A youth hid in a washroom of the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion for two days before a janitor investigated a stall that was locked all the time

Inside, the youngster had created a jerry built bachelor apartment with hotplate, a change of clothes and a tuxedo that he planned to don once the ceremony got under way and he could slip in among the legitimate guests

Another year a group of teenagers ensconced themselves in a closer in the balcony. Their noisy conversation gave

A man claiming to be Barbra Streisand's husband showed up several years in a row, demanding to be admitted since his "wife" was already inside. Moon says the man is "harmless but a little off-balance," and still sends letters to movie studios discussing his "wife's"

Stressand is not married

The Governor's Ball held after the ceremony at the Beverly Hilton in Beverly Hills is another security nightmare. Sometimes the waiters seem to outnumber the guests because many of them are impostors in rented uniforms

Gate crashers prize uniforms worn by Academy ushers. Uniforms were stolen from a cabinet one year, but the theft was discovered before the ceremony. The genuine ushers were given discreet identification buttons, and on Oscar night four counterfeit ushers were arrested for burglary

Every year there are several arrests, Moon says, usually among the fans in the stands for drunken rowdiness

FSU offense keeps garnet jerseys

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS

For the second straight week, the offense shined in Florida State's scrimmage Saturday afternoon.

In the coaches' scoring system that includes important plays as well as regular scoring, the offense beat out the defense 50-36. Last week, the offense beat out the defense, and in a symbolic gesture, coaches awarded the offense with the garnet jerseys. Apparently, this was the first time in several years that the offense has worn garnet jerseys.

"Yes, the offense will still be in garnet," head coach Bobby Bowden said after the scrimmage "I think the defense did make some progress today."

Several walk-ons caught Bowden's eye Saturday, especially tailback Curtis Thomas. A Thomasville, Ganative, Thomas took advantage of the absence of Greg. Allen (track), Rosey Snipes (injury) and Darrin Holloman (injury) to work with the first unit offense. Thomas gained 94 yards on 22 carries and scored a touchdown following a 44-yard run one play before.

With projected starting quarterback Eric Thomas still out with a knee injury, Kirk Coker continued to impress Bowden with his work on the first unit offense. "He was definitely the outstanding quarterback. He hit several nice passes down there, and his running was good, too," Bowden said. "We'd like to see a firm number one and firm number two quarterback going into the fall."

While Bowden said the defense made some improvement this week, he reiterated that it needs plenty of work before it will be ready for the fall. New defensive coordinator Mickey Andrews has been trying to install a different system this spring, and the adjustment has been hard at times. "We put in a defense, and they start picking it up," Bowden said. "Then we introduce something new and they get confused. We're trying to be a fundamental team right now. Once you get that down, it gets easier.

Rattler QBs look good in scrimmage

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS

Under a hot April sun, the Florida A&M Rattlers went through their second football scrimmage of spring practice, and head coach Rudy Hubbard has a lot of things to be happy about.

Judging from Saturday's one-hour scrimmage, the Rattlers will have a pleasant problem choosing a backup for starting quarterback Mike Kelly. Three quarterbacks took turns working with the second unit offense while Kelly worked a series with the first, and then divided up when Kelly sat out the rest of the scrimmage.

"They're all getting better," Hubbard said after the scrimmage. "I think we could win with all four of them."

Converted running back Carl Williams kept his loose hold on second string with some impressive option running throughout the scrimmage, and completed the only pass he attempted for 20 yards to Derrick McCray.

"I was real pleased with his work today," Hubbard said. Harold Vinson and Calvin Giles also made great strides in Saturday's scrimmage, with Vinson completing four of four passes for 104 yards. The sophomore also ripped off an exciting 45-yard run in the last series, setting up a touchdown two plays later by Curtis Burns.

Giles completed four of six passes for 75 yards, including a 30-yard completion to transfer Matt Sampson on the first series of the scrimmage.

"Vinson showed us a lot of things out there today, but he lacks the technical ability," Hubbard said. "Giles is simply a tough kid."

Despite all the impressive play of the "other three," it is

Kelly who is number one. The senior completed three of four passes on his only series, engineering the first unit offense to a touchdown with a 15-yard strike to tight end Todd Williams.

Whether it be the first or second unit, the offensive line provided gaping holes for the backfield all afternoon, and Hubbard couldn't be happier. Last year, the offensive was beset with injuries and inexperience, and didn't come together until the last few games of the season. This year will be different, according to Hubbard. "It feel real good about our line," he said. "It will be the best line since our national championship season."

Complementing the depth of the offensive line will be a deep running game, if Saturday was an accurate indication. First unit fullback Charles Bevel, who has returned after a try at tailback, led all runners with 57 yards on seven carries and scored a touchdown.

His backup, Curtis Burns, was also impressive with his 35 yards on six carries and a TD run of five yards.

"I feel that Curtis Burns is going to push him (Bevel)," Hubbard said. "He doesn't make a lot of errors. He just hasn't been on a decent weight program yet."

Starting tailback Tony Barber ran for 44 yards on six carries, including a 12-yard TD run. Barber also caught two passes for 18 yards. Backing him up was Dale Robinson, who gained 51 yards on only four carries, and also scored a touchdown while working with the first unit on one series.

"Robinson's a good, consistent I-back," Hubbard said.
"He's got good quickness and good strength. But I don't think he'll push Tony because Tony is so smooth."

Too bad Pindar can't cover a Florida State baseball game

Pindar. Now there was a sportswriter Pindar understood athletics Pindar understood athletes. He knew that the selfconfidence that fires a winner eventually degenerates to make an arrogant loser - the gods don't go for pumped-up pride (look at Muhammed Ali). He saw that the stronger, the taller, the faster were worshipped as semidivine. And he could write about the thrill of victory like the staff of Sports Illustrated would sell their souls to Satan to be able to do. Pindar's only problem was he lived in the 5th century B.C. before there was baseball.

D.K. ROBERTS

Pindar would've liked the FSU/Florida game the other night. Not the first one. That wasn't so much a contest as cuisinarting of the Seminoles. No, the 11-9 epic struggle, a match-up worthy of the Pythian Games press box and the smell of slaw dogs was in the air. Two girls hung on the chain-link fence by right field. On the backs of their tshirts was stencilled (in lavender) "Wendy and "Dee Ann." A gaggle of middle-aged and middle-class took to screaming at a couple of understandably slow little old ladies"Down in front! Hey! Down in front!" tlike, they're too stupid to stand up if they want to see so had?) and five hove in Chinola jackets solemnly ate popcorn. Behind first base, the Animals, that religious group of FSU fans, began to sing "Go to hell, Gators" under the choir direction of a bearded boy with horns on his helmet and a tattoo.

Baseball being played the way Pindar would've liked it

God knows what Pindar would have thought of the spectators. I expect he wouldn't have been too crazy about them since he was a Theban aristocrat and liked a stiff-upper-lip kind of demeanor from sportsfans. But he would've loved it when Jimmy Jones, the first baseman for FSU. whacked a three-run homer all the way over the right field fence in inning number one He would've known he was at a ball game.

FSU baseball players have great baseballplayer names. Not that Pindar would care about this part because being a Classical Greek he wouldn't get all the exquisite nuances of modern Americano. But look Luis Alicea, Drew Kosco, Jose Marzan, Frank Fazzini. The trouble with the University of Florida team was that too many of them have football-player names. Mike Stanley, Tim Owen, Bruce Crabbe It's easier to cheer for people with real baseball names

In the fifth inning when the score was tred 7.7. Pindar would have been reflecting on Fate and Destiny. On the field, the FSU first baseman and the Florida occupant of first base were discussing Fate and Destiny too how their same schedules fit around finals week It was civilized and sportsmanlike. Neither took any notice of the Animals who were howling "Gay Goters!" and whistling at the batgirls in their garnet and gold sweat ensembles. Pindar would NOT have liked the batgirls. Women at athletic contests! The poor old poet would have been reaching for the valum bottle

Divine inspiration struck in the 6th inning when number 43 was up to bat for FSU Vince Insogna (heroic name!) knocked the ball straight to Jacksonville. Two runs home. Now he has what Pindar would call arete. Virtue Excellence Pindar could've written a band-up ode about Vince Insogna's arete and the hit that put FSU ahead for good. He would've maybe jazzed it up a little and had Vince getting a proper laurel crown and some statues put up in his honor and stuff like that but poets are allowed to take little liberties with the truth even when they are

If we could only bring back the Pindaric victory song, the Epinicion instead of the box score. Then we could all see baseball for what it is - a pastoral religious festival not a mere diversion. The fans feel it. Pindar would have gone wild

Rattlerettes receive Award this year because we truly feel that we didn't have any basketball awards

Despite the absence of a Most Valuable Player Award this year, several players received recognition at the Florida A&M Rattlerettes' basketball awards banquet Saturday evening at the Hilton Hotel.

"We're not going to give out a Most Valuable Player stars," head coach Mickey Clayton iold the audience of approximately 100 people. "This is perhaps the first time we played totally as a team. We feel like we're a collection of lights, and if one light goes out, the rest keep on shining."

One of the bright lights that went out for the Rattlerettes in 1983-'84 was All-American Cynthia Lee, who sat out the year with a knee injury; nevertheless, FAMU went on to finish 19.9

received certificates of merit for their play this season, while Myrick was recognized for making the Mid-Lastern Athletic Conference's All-Rookie team.

lady 'Noles have a busy weekend

PROMISTARY REPORTS

Florida State's softball team won two and lost one at the University of Mississippi for Women Invitational over the weekend, but the I loss was a crucial one-

The Lady Seminoles (31-5-2) dropped a close game to Nicholls State 2-1 as errors and mental mustakes took their toll. FSU's only run came in the top of the seventh when Teresa Collins got on base with a oneout single and then stole second. Sunnie O'Neal later singled and Collins was able to score, tying the game at 1-1.

A run by Nicholls State in the bottom of the seventh ended the game for FSU

Florida State got back on the winning track by shutting out Southern Miss 3-0 as Shelley Berube pitched a one-hitter The freshman from Alberta, Canada struck out eight to improve her record to 14-1.

Tina Kyler came on in rebel of Monica Lawfield in extra innings to help the Lady Noles squeak past Mississippi for Women, 2-1. In the top of the ninth, third baseman Cathy Gooding led off with a double and advanced to third on a fielder's choice. Gooding scored the winning run on Amy Snider's sacrifice bunt.

Bandits win, but Bulls lose

UNITED PRINS INTERNATIONAL

The Tampa Bay Bandits had been unable to stop the opposition's offense for the past three weeks as they stumbled along on a three-game losing streak

But Saturday night the Bandits (4-3) hosted a team with even less success and came away with a 24-0 United States Football League victory over the winless Oakland Invaders.

Running back Gary Anderson and the passing combination of quarterback John Reaves and wide receiver Eric Truvillion were more than the Invaders could handle.

Anderson, who had 98 yards on 20 carries, scored on a pair of 1-yard runs and Truvillion, who caught 7 passes for 128 yards, caught a 6-yard scoring toss from Reaves, who completed 23 of 33 passes for 282 yards and was intercepted twice. ...

Birmingham running back Joe Cribbs said his team came to the Gator Bowl expecting an easy USFI victory over the Jacksonville Bulls The 6-1 Stallions did manage to take home a 24-17 win but it wasn't casy

But it took linebacker Herbie Spencer's interception of a Robbie Mahfouz pass to break a 17-17 deadlock with five minutes remaining in the game

Green blossoms in Springtime run

DAVE PICARIFILO

Former Florida State University track runner Larry Green surged away from Herb Wilh at the four-mile mark and went on to win the Springtime Tallahassee 10K race Saturday morning

Green's time of 30-03 set a new course record Wills, also an FSU track alumnus, finished second in the ninth annual event with a time of 30:20.

We hit the first mile in 4:36 and ran fairly even until mile four." Wills said

"Then Larry got away from me and I couldn't make up the slack "

Four members of the Lady 'Noles track team also competed in the event

FSU's Carla Borovicka was the first female finisher in 35.57. She was closely pursued by teammate Margaret Coomber (36 03), who finished second.

"I just wanted to go into the first mile fast and challenge myself," Borovicka said "I felt competitive "

A total of 930 runners finished the race.

Nicaragua sues U.S. to protest CIA covert war

icaragua filed a suit against the United States at the world court in The Hague Monday, demanding an end to alleged acts of American aggression including the mining of its ports and the destruction of bridges, hospitals and

"Nicaragija has presented a demand asking for a declaration in depth on the visolations and aggressions of the United States," Nicaraguan Ambassador to the Netherland, Carlos Arguello, told the official government radio station, Le Voz de Nicaragua

"These activities include the mining of ports, the destruction of bridges, hospitals and airports and all military attacks against my country," Arguello said in an interview in The Hague

Arguello said Nicaragua also asked the court that it issue provisional and mediate orders to insure that the damages inflicted by the mines do not become "irreparable

Some 12 ships, including Dutch. Soviet and Japanese - have struck mines off Nicaragua in the past two months

Arguello said the suit was the first filed by Nicaragua against the United States and also the Central American nation's first request for a ruling under international law to the International Court of Justice in over 20 years

We are all in agreement that there does exist the least doubt that the government of the United States is obligated to accept the jurisdiction of the court," Arguello said

But the suit came a day after the State Department in Washington said the world court was being misused "as a forum for a propaganda campaign" and would ignore any court ruling on the charges of mining Nicaraguan ports.

Nicaraguan rebel leader Edgai Chamorro Coronel, of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force (FDN), said in a telephone interview that "the FDN, not the Central Intelligence Agency, is responsible for mining Nicaragua's ports."

"Yes, we have mined the ports, and we will keep mining them while the Marxist government is in power in Nicaragua," said Chamorro.

Over the weekend, however, members of Congress and the administration disclosed that the CIA has been directly supervising placement of the mines The sources said Americans working for the CIA stand off the Nicaraguan coast in a headquarters ship. From there, they direct the Latin American operatives who use small, high speed boats to sneak into port and lay the mines, The New York Times reported.

The administration told the Times the activity is justified under international law in self-defense for El Salvador and the other Central American nations against which they say Nicaragua is committing acts of 'aggression.'

In Costa Rica, authorities investigating the crash of a transport plane near the Nicaraguan border said they found the remains of two bodies, but that identification of the victims or the aircraft was not immediately possible

Deliberate intricacies confuse budget cutters

second in a series

BY EARL C. RAVENAL

Where is the real money to be found in the defense budget? It is in the large aggregate combat forces, and their broad missions in the world.

To understand this, an anatomy lesson is in order. We will use the Reagan administration's original fiscal 1985 military budget request of $305 billion for this

Looking first at combat united, we find that strategic nuclear forces-that is, the missiles and bombers aimed at the U.S.S.R.-come to about $70 billion. All the rest, $235 billion, is dedicated to the General Purpose Forces-land divisions, tactical air wings and surface naval units.

· An average Army division will cost over $4.8 billion, and we will have 17 of them.

· A wing of tactical aircraft will cost about $2.1 billion, and we will have the equivalent of 44

. The Marine Corps, including three ground division, will cost $18 billion

· One aircraft carrier battle group deployed in a forward location will cost over $13 billion, and our present strategy requires us to keep four or five forward.

But a sharper picture emerges when we look at these forces in geographical terms. Pentagon budgeteers would complain that attributing particular units to particular regional missions distorts the picture. They claim that many units have double assignments-for example, that a particular Air Cavalry brigade based in Texas is targeted both for Europe and the Persian

But that is double counting, and since any unit can only fight in one place at a time, it makes sense to attribute particular U.S. units to the areas they are primarily committed to

For fiscal 1983, the Reagan administration intends the 20 active U.S. ground divisions to be committed as follows:

· Western Europe, 11 divisions.

· East Asia, four divisions.

· Other regions (primarily the Middle East), five divisions

These allocations are likely to change further as new "Light Infantry Divisions" are organized for use in unforeseen Third World contingencies.

Applying these fractions to the total cost of General Purpose Forces we can calculate the rough cost of our regional Purpose commitments. Europe will continue to be the main beneficiary of U.S. defense resources. accounting for $129 billion. Asia will absorb

Woman's disappearance could involve Wilder

A Chipola Junior College student disappeared March 3, and the FBI is investigating the possibility that she may have been abducted by Christopher Wilder - the man wanted for the rape of a 19-year-old Florida State University student and for several other sexual assaults in both the United States and Australia

Wilder was recently placed on the HBI's Ten Most Wanted List

IBI agent Don Baldwin said Monday the circumstances surrounding the disappearance of 26 year-old Virginia Scott of Grand Ridge 'leave the possibility' that Wilder may have been involved

"For one thing, there's the time Baldwin said "She frame." disappeared in March, and Wilder is alleged to have been in Tallahassee in March And when she left her residence she was on her way to a Panama City mall '

Wilder, an Australian race car driver who owns real estate in south Florida, is said to lure his victims from shopping malls with offers of modeling

Scott is about 5'11" tall, weighs approximately 135 pounds and has light-brown, shoulder length hair, blue eyes and fair skin. When she was last seen in March, she was wearing a pink sweater, grey skirt and black highheeled shoes. Scott was driving a silver and black 1978 Lincoln Mark V with Florida license plate DWR 826 the day she disappeared

According to Baldwin, neither Scott nor her car have been seen since March

Anyone with information about Scott's disappearance should call the FBI at 224-4107 or the Jackson County Sheriff's Department at 904-482-2132

Baldwin said he's not prepared to say Wilder is definitely involved, but said officials are worned

DAS KAPITAL

Go ahead—be an anarchist: Slouch during the Pledge

BY D.K. ROBERTS

It is Monday morning. Tallahassee is full of water. The Capitol cafeteria is full of Marines and ladies in little white DAV caps. Everybody buying coffee is dropping the money on the floor. The lady taking the money drops your change. The orange juice tastes funny.

Up in the House, things are no better. It's 10-32 and they haven't even got up to the prayer or Doctor of the Day. The reps are shewing the fat about their fabulous Jacksonville Appreciation Weekend. See, on Friday your state legislators worked for 58 whole minutes then they had to stop 'cause they had to get this special train to J-ville to be wined and dined and caused to think good thoughts about the great metropolis. I just hope they didn't let the boys off the train. The minute they smelled the chemical warfare-test air, it'd be all over. But who can blame them for fleeing the Springtime Tally Terror (Tumbling Tots — of no?)?

The fun is over. Monday falls, crushing several cars, pets, flowers, ruining many lives.

The House prayer is given by the pastor of the Presbyterian church in Gretna, brought o you by James Harold Thompson and the Calvinist tradition. His tie is wider than I-

How to be an anarchist, Lesson Oneslouch during the Pledge to the Flag People stare at you so bad. The hundreds of Disabled American Veteran ladies in the galleries with paper forget-me-nots pinned to bulwark-bosoms stand straight and true as telephone poles and cast an evil eye on the posture-deprived.

Speaker Lee Muppet clanks the gavel. The message goes round the floor "Shhhshhh CLASS!" Something goes wrong. HB134 passes. HB 134 is a good bill. It slings the hammer at people who stand in what they call "familial, custodial or official authority to a child" and abuse the child sexually or sell the child on the street: parental pimps. There is a slew of amendments which go on for some time. This means the House gets to talk about sex all morning which is probably more fun than lots of them have had in months.

You too can get a resolution from the House commending you. All you have to do is act heroic Mr. Clarence Singleton, who was forced to remain standing for some time while the House beamed approval at him, got a pat on the head in HR 197. Rep. Evans-Jones told the story of Mr. Clarence Singleton trying to revive a hit and run victim who, alax, was beyond hope. Mr. Singleton kept trying to sit down and she wouldn't let him — the price you pay for valor.

As HB43 — a bill which says a big. N=O to contraband coming into prisons (no more hack saws in the lemon meringue) gets a well-deserved airing. Representative Watt, everyone's favorite Lake Park Republican, opens some mail. It's a card, thas red birds on the cover and a check inside. How nice. Rep. Watt is drinking Tab. He starts to take a couple of little blue capsules but drops one. (So who says investigative journalism is dead?)

Watt-watching Part Two: The Repwants his lunch. It's 11:54 after all. He's tidied up his desk, closed his chic folder, and is standing on one leg behind his chair. Just like a flamingo.

All the gang wants lunch. Today they've worked for 84 minutes! This may be a stretch record. Monday, monsoon-day. What a giggle. Can the rest of the week be this wintillating?

House creates a compound crime

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

The House Monday voted to create a new crime of arson battery to lock up arsonists whose illegal action cause injury to firefighters and others.

The bill (HB 75) was approved 110-0 and sent to the Senate.

Rep. Art Simon, D-Miami, said last year Florida recorded 35 deaths and more than 400 injuries related to arson or suspected arson

He said his bill, by creating a separate offense for any injuries related to arson, would allow prosecutors to charge arsonists with more than one crime

The bill would not change the penalties for arson, he said, but could lead to convictions for added crimes that would result in longer total sentences.

Darts and Laurels

Dart: To CBS News for promoting the interview with former President Richard Nixon on 60 Minutes Sunday night as candid glimpse into the mind of the man driven from office as a crook. Far from exhibiting "astonishing candor," as CBS put it, Nixon used the broadcast to obfuscate the record of his misdeeds. It was pretty easy for him really—the interviewer was Frank Gannon, a former aide and long-time defender of the former president. The ratings aren't out yet, but we're sure the broadcast helped 60 Minutes's ratings, more than compensating CBS for the $500,000 it paid to broadcast exerpts of the 38-hours of interviews. But there's the problem with much of the new shusiness these days: what passes for journalism is often nothing more than entertainment. The one should not be confused with the other.

Laurel: To the producers of the children's television program, "Sesame Street" for correcting an apparent act of insensitivity. The problem was the lyrics to a song intended to help children learn they "need not fear the different kind of monster images which their fantasies might conjure up," but one mother thought they might make children more susceptible to child molestation. The lyrics "If I make friends with a friendly monster," I'll let him bounce me on his knee. I'll let him do whatever he wantster, Especially if he's bigger than me."

"One thing of the main things we're telling our kids is that they don't have to do whatever a big person wants them to, or allow the big person to do whatever they want, if it makes the child uncomfortable," the mother wrote.

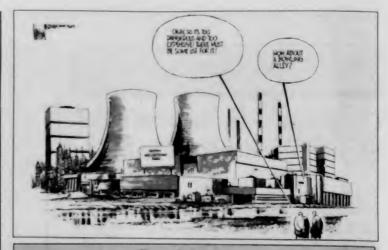

Dart: To the Reagan administration, for its churlish announcement Sunday that the United States would not abide by any World Court ruling against the United States for directing its covert war against Nicaragua. Darts also for the administration's continuing insistence that the covert war is intended only to half the alleged flow of arms to Salvadoran rebels. Everybody in the administration—not to mention the general public—knows better than that. The mining of harbors, the bombing of airports, oil refineries, schools and hospitals are intended to undermine the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. They are acts of international terrorism by a government—our own—which regularly criticizes other governments for acts of the same nature. By endorsing and using these tactics, the United States makes the job of ending international terrorism that much more difficult.

BSU misquote

Editor:

On April 6, Flambeau writer Michelle Gould wrote an inaccurate statement concerning Herbert Andrews, the president of Black Srudent Union Theoretically, according to Ms. Gould, Andrews and "We always like money," in response to an increase in the BSU budget — pending the approval of FSU President Bernie Sager. This statement, undoubtedly, was intended to display a hypothetical, avaricious BSU. Then she wrote that it is doubtful many student government-funded groups would disagree with Andrews. This article exhibited the incompetency of the writer to write the truth as stated.

The truth is the President Andrews did not say, We always like money." This carries a negative connotation. Instead, he said, "The BSU always lacks money " For the past four to five years, the BSU's budget has been consistently cut. Last year there was an incremental increase in the budget This year, if the budget is approved, there will be an increase of $5,000. We are happy to have an increase rather than a decrease in this year's budget. Also we are satisfied in the context that we are progressing positively by an increase in the budget as opposed to regressing negatively by a decrease This statement that "We always like money" can not, in any way possible, be equivalent in context to that of the statment "We always lack money." The former statement effects the BSU negatively by stigmatizing us.

Creationism

One more battle has been won against the creationist forces, and this time deep in the heart of Texas The Texas State's Attorney General, Jim Mattox, has recently declared the Texas State Board of Education's rules on evolution in biology textbooks as having a non-secular purpose and therefore unconstitutional. Pressured by Norm and Mel Gabler, fundamentalist extremists who have successfully censored thousands of books used in Texas public schools, the Texas Board of Education adopted a series of anti-science rules which effectively eliminated the proper presentation of evolution in textbooks used by the state. Mattox's ruling will be a step towards righting almost a decade of academic neglect which has hung like a dark cloud over the Texas school

Why should this be of any interest to those of us who live in the Sunshine State? The answer is quite simple, I exas represents nearly 10 percent of the nation's textbook market and publishers have typically used Texas guidelines to determine the quantity and quality of their products for the rest of the nation. Since 1970, there has been a drastic reduction of material on organic evolution in high school biology texts, and in some cases reference to the subject has been dropped altogether. This prompted the New York City Board of Education to reject two books accepted by Texas in 1982, one of which "did not state that evolution is accepted by most secunitist and presents special creation without characterizing it as a supernatural explanation that is outside the domain of science."

It is clear that something drastic needs to be done in order to break the stronghold that Texas has on the textbook market Gov Bob Graham has proposed a linking of Florida, California and New York into a sort of tri-state consortium in order to have more impact on textbook publishers. Such a step was long needed and the governor should be congratulated for his far-sightedness in this matter We must not forget, however, that there will always be fanatics like the Gablers who would impose their religio political ideas into the school system if given even half a chance. It is up to local school boards and concerned citizen groups to ensure that this never happens in Florida and our educational system remains out of the hands of religious extremists. Florida has a quality public educational system - let's support Gov Graham and keep it

Raft of State

Edito

Our Democratic Ship of State is really a raft, but happily a raft in unsinkable.

The ongoing presidential campaign and subsequent '84 election will test the validity of Lincoln's statement. "You can fool all the people some of the time; you can fool some of the people all the time; but, you can't fool all the people all the time."

It will also reveal the maturity of the American voter.

Ben Franklin's statement: "Experience is a hard school, but fools will learn in no other" has already been amply proven.

Jackson's demands

BY PHYLLIS CROCKETT

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Jesse Jackson's strong showing among black voters means he will have a major voice in negotiating the national political agenda at the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco. He is clearly in a position to make significant gains in a way blacks have never done before

"Jackson's leverage comes from being a powerful Democrat," says Roger Wilkins, senior fellow at the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C. "He is one of the most significant members of the Democratic Party in the country. That wasn't true four months ago."

Jackson's power derives from grass-roots blacks. In Chicago and New York, they gave him 80 percent of their votes. In the South, particularly in Mississippi and Virginia, where blacks have had little voice in party politics, the turnout for Jackson exceeded all expectations.

This strong showing comes despite the fact that many black leaders have endorsed Mondale or remained uncommitted. But Jackson's proven ability to deliver the black vote, and the Democratic nominee's need for that vote, means Jackson will play a major role at the July convention.

"Blacks have a chance to get their agenda through because of Jesse Jackson," said Maxine Waters, California State assemblywoman from Los Angeles. "There's absolutely no doubt about it. The Democratic Party must take us seriously."

Says Roger Wilkins, "There will be two black agendas—one to deal with the Democratic Party, the other to deal with specific programs." Though described by some as a Jackson advisor, Wilkins holds no official post in the Jackson campaign.

"Jackson will say to the party, 'Blacks have supported the party reliably for decades and got little or nothing. Now we want guarantees that the party will help black candidates,' " says Wilkins.

"Jackson will also want the party to develop black candidates and run them throughout the country."

Voting rights is the top item on Jackson's agenda, according to Dr. Ronald Walters, Jackson's deputy campaign manager for issues. Most important, he said, "Jesse Jackson will find it impossible to support any Democratic Pagy nominee for president who does not support our second primary challenge."

This refers to runoff primaries in the South where blacks have run for Congress and won in the first election, but must face a runoff if they poll less than 50 percent of the vote.

At that point, says Walters, a political science professor at Howard University, "The blacks lose because the black vote is then diluted." He explains that this is key to Jackson's agenda because "without the second primary, maybe as many as 15 blacks could be elected to Congress, and with their numbers added to the blacks already in Congress, more progressive legislation could be passed for everyone."

Jackson feels so strongly about this issue that if the Democratic platform fails to include what he wants on voting rights, he may tun as an independent

Jackson's agenda fits into a national black agenda called she People's Platform, which grew out of a year long series of meetings involving more than 50 black civil rights, religious, business, community and social organizations. The 55 page platform calls for huge cuts in defense spending, repeal of recent tax cuts, and restoring social programs with adjustments for inflation. It also calls for specific changes in welfare programs to emphasize education and job training

Jackson will be the chief broker for blacks at the convention, but not the only broker. "The problems are too broad, too much is at stake, for any one person to broker on behalf of the black nation," says Joseph Lowry, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and chairman of the group which put together the People's Platform.

"We agree that Jesse Jackson will play a psyotal tole at the convention," adds M. Carl Holman, president of the National Urban Coalition and eo coordinator of the People's Platform. "But the nominee and the parts must also respond to what the other black leaders are saying as well." Holman and others say Jackson and nearly every other black at the convention will be pushing the same agenda—the People's Platform.

Although Jackson has had his difficulties with some of the nation's black leaders, there now appears to be an effort to set differences aside. In fact, it now is difficult to find a black leader who will publicly say anything against the Jackson candidacy. "They have been silenced," says California's Maxine Waters. "Jackson's campaign has made believers of them—or at least the grass roots have made believers of them."

Many political observers wonder what will happen to the tremendous momentum built up by the ever growing numbers of blacks voting for Jackson. Can that momentum be sustained in November when Jackson is not the nominee? The consensus is that it all depends on the Democratic Party.

"Blacks will not come out in huge numbers just to vote against Ronald Reagan. They have to feel they have something to vote for," says Roger Wilkins

"If Jackson comes out of the convention enthusiastic, winning some key planks in the platform, and Mondale has the nomination, and everyone can see that picture of Jesse holding up Mondale's hand and beaming, if blacks can see that enthusiasm and then, if Jackson and other black leaders get out and stump the country for the Democrats, blacks will again come out to vote in great numbers."

EXPLANATION: The popular vote should be quite close in this state that prides itself on its idiosyncratic voting. Polisters are saying it's too close to call and that a lot will depend on how much of the black vote Jackson can pull, particularly in Philadelphia where blacks make up 40 percent of the registered voters. In the delegate race, it'll be no contest, Mondale by a wide margin.

House nixes chemical castration; toughens penalties for gang rape

The House Monday defeated a move to authorize chemical castration for rapists, but agreed to increase penalties for gang rapists and parents who involve their children in sex.

The House shouted down an amendment by Rep. Kesth Arnold. D Fort Myers, that would have let some rapusts shorten prison terms by undergoing treatment with depoprovers, a drug that reduces sex drive

Arnold said Michigan, Maryland and Texas have used the so-called "chemical castration" with good results

He said the drug wouldn't be used on men who rape as an act of violence, but rather on those who rape due to a physical hormonal imbalance.

No one is required to submit to the process of chemical castration," Arnold told the House

Arnold proposed the procedure as an amendment to a bill dealing with sex involving minors. He also has filed a separate chemical castration bill, which was not affected by Monday's House action

Arnold agreed with opponents who said the bill would deviate from sentencing guidelines adopted last year, but said the Department of Corrections estimates those standards will result in 60 consisted rapists being freed on probation this Indiciary Chairman Hamilton Unchurch sayd depoprovera has not been proven as an anti-rape drug.

'This chemical that they're touting so hard is a treatment for acne. That's a pretty serious side effect for acne treatment," said Upchurch, D-St. Augustine.

Rep. Elaine Gordon, D.North Miami, argued the House shouldn't adopt new measures until it has a chance to review a study of Florida's Mentally Disordered Sex Offender

The House killed Arnold's proposal on a voice vote, but adopted an amendment to increase the rape penalties when more than one person is involved in the assault. The proposal is similar to a Senate bill sponsored by Sen. Betty Castor, D-

The bill (HB 134) filed by Rep. Frank Messersmith, R. Lake Worth, would establish a first-degree felony for parents or other legal custodians who have sex with children between ages 11 and 18, or who solicit the children for sexual activity. Punishment would be up to 30 years in prison and a $10,000

Lawmakers approved amendments to make a first-degree felony of sexual battery with a mentally deficient victim over age 11, and to eliminate the defense contention that a child had consented or had prior sexual experience

"That should have no bearing when an adult is having relations with a child of such tender age," Gordon said.

Giving victims 'rights'

A House subcommittee, moved by testimony of a man barred from the murder trial of his 10-year-old daughter's killer, voted Monday to give crime victims the right to be heard in criminal cases

The "victim's rights" package by Rep. Dexter W Lehtinen, D-Perrine, and Ileana Ros, R-Miami, would make prosecutors consult victims and their families at all phases of criminal trials—so they could object to release on bail, advise against light sentences and tell the courts the impact of crime on their lives. The bill (HB 774) would also forbid criminals to profit from books or movies written about their crimes and would make judges order offenders to reimburse their victims for financial losses, whenever possible.

Judges could also order criminals to stay away from their victims-thus preventing reprisal or intimidation-as a condition or probation, and it would be a felony to threaten or otherwise intimidate a witness or victim

The House Criminal Justice subcommittee refused to take out a provision Lehtinen recommended striking, protecting the addresses and work locations of victims and witnesse

The House Monday unanimously passed a bill aimed at helping Florida veterans of the Vietnam War participate in a lawsuit over the use of Agent Orange

The bill (HB 116), filed by wheelchair bound Rep. Larry Hawkins, passed 110-0 and was sent to the Senate Hawkins, D-Jacksonville, was wounded in the first Tet Offensive in Vietnam and received a Bronze Star-

Hawkins said his bill would create a two year statute of limitations for legal action over injuries that resulted from exposure to phenoxy herbicides, or Agent Orange, between 1962 and 1975

Hawkins said the bill would allow Florida veterans to join a lawsuit underway in New York, but would not build in a presumption that Agent Orange was responsible for any injuries a veteran may have suffered

Lehtinen said such information is publicly stated during preliminary hearings and trials, and that it could be unconstitutional to forbid the news media to report it

Subcommittee members said, however, the purpose of protecting victims and witnesses would be aided through confidentiality of addresses, places and employment and telephone numbers

KERRVILLE, Texas — As many as 75 hitchhikers may have been lured to a ranch and forced into slavery by ranch owners who used cattle prods and chains, a sheriff said Monday.

Officers with a search warrant Friday found five men and a woman living in a barn on a secluded ranch about 75 miles northwest of San Antonio. They were placed in protective custody.

The search warrant was usued after a worker escaped from the ranch March 28 and called authorities

CROMWELL, Conn. — A 35-foot-high, inflatable satin and still likeness of Jesus Carlst will soon appear at a former missile command site atop Mount Cromwell, courtesy of a Roman Catholic priest.

The Rev Edward Doberty said he will elevate the monument at the former Nike missle command site Saturday. The figure was designed by California artist Scott MacNeill and will have life-like movements and detail, once it is inflated by an industrial fan, said Doberty.

election plans in a conference involving congressional leaders, conservationists and political polisters.

SAN ANGELO, Texas — Mass murderer Heary Lee Lucas would have been legally insane if he killed an unidentified hitchliker four years ago as he has confessed, an Austin, Texas, psychiatrist testified Monday.

"It's not a license he asked for. It was a gene that he was born with," Dr. Jay Fogelman said of Lucas, described as a chronic schizophrenic.

The 47-year-old drifter, who has implicated himself in more than 150 slayings nationwide, is charged with capital murder in the rape-strangulation of a woman whose body was found in a culvert along Interstate 35 near Georgetown, Texas, on Oct. 31, 1979. Lucas has pleaded innocent.

FPAL is seeking a two-year increase in its prices. Beginning late this year, the utility wants to charge about $10 a month more for residential customers who use a monthly average of 1,000 kilowatt hours.

CAPE CANAVERAL — Challenger's crewmen conserved fuel Monday for a second shot at snagging. Solar Max and were given a "fighting chance" of success if their gas gauge does not drop too far during rendervous with the struggling satellite.

$47 billion And an expanded Rapid Deployment Force, principally aimed at the Persian Gulf, but also intended for use in other areas, including Latin America, will take $59 billion

Where do these figures come from?

There are two sets of calculations. In the first, the rough number of basic combat units is each of the four military services is divided uso the entire manpower of that service and the entire budget of that service, including its share of Pentagon agencies, defense-wide activities, civil defense and military MUSICADOR.

This gives the full annual cost of procuring and keeping each basic combat unit and helps explain the personnel and budget implications of different alternative force gructures

This calculation counts only combat forces. Everything else in the defense budget research and development, civil defense, military assistance and so forth - must be genudered as a support cost of overhead But we want to calculate combat units on a "fullsice" basis, incorporating support and excrhead, to know the real cost of those

Pentagon budgeteers object to allocating espense categories like retirement pay to embat functions. Though this objection has some validity, "full slice" costing is more activate than traditional costing in important vivs. For one thing, the usual method appresents the costs of forces - and thus potential savings from reductions - as perely marginal.

If we don't include all support and overhead costs, we will be seriously undercounting what it takes, in the long run, to produce military forces.

Of course, support costs and overhead do not diminish automatically with cuts in the more obvious combat forces. As with any fixed costs, in government or industry, it takes the guts to cut them as well as the intelligence to identify them. Finally, if you are selling defense as a product - which, in a sense, the government is doing to the taxpayers - you eventually would go broke if you failed to include and recover all indirect costs.

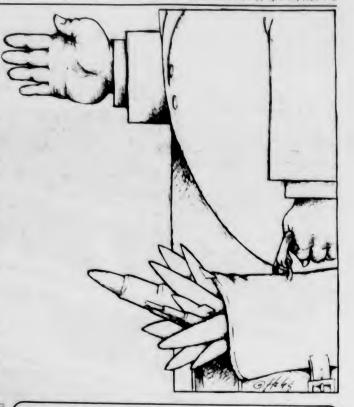

In the second calculation, we assign all forces either to "Strategic" or "General Purpose," and then attribute General Purpose Forces some region - again, on a full-slice basis, so we can link defense dollars and manpower with specific regions

This double effort - full-slice costing and allocating forces to particular regions necessary to relate manpower and dollar inputs to the ultimate miliary outputs Perhaps that is why defense officials seem so intent on obscuring these connections

In the final analysis, it is a matter of "truth in packaging" - telling taxpayers where their money is going in terms of foreign policy

SEEKING COMPANION

I realize that this is an unorthodox ad, to say the least, however, it has occurred to me for some time that in a community such as ours there must be many very nice people who would like to explore a meaningful personal relationship yet lack any real opportunity structure for so doing

This is essentially the situation that I face. I am a 41 year old, well-educated, financially independent businessman, and president of a company with operations throughout the U.S. I am also a very involved single parent of several small children, and am at a point in my life where I have no inclination whatsoever to be involved with the superficiality and randomness of the whole dating and bar scene (Hence the ad.)

I am nice looking, trim, a non-smoker and in good health. I am also a warm and spontaneous person who tries to enjoy life to its fullest, while being responsible in the sense of treating others as I want to be treated

I would very much like to meet an attractive, intelligent, sincere and emotionally mature woman who shares my love of life, family and Tallahassee.

Please respond with photo and personal information... To P.O. Box 5907 Tal, Fl 32301 J.K.F.

All in all, I'd rather not Rax

There's a new structure on the strip, a bright gleaming streamlined box filled with somewhat overpriced sandwiches and baked potatoes and such and potted plants and lots of wood and piped in Top 40 and an intensive cleanliness heretofore reserved for hospitals: potted ambience, if you will

And you would, wouldn't you'- you'd rather Rax, that is Sure you would - it beats passe-"Quelle-est le boeuf?" Wendy's or tacky Casinos or honky-tonk Mid-America Steak and Egg.

But how does Rax beat the rest? 'Cuz it's new, and we Americans just love new stuff Cuz it's got an "Endless Salad Bar," not to mention an endless Parking Lot, a Parking Lot that dwarfs the restaurant itself 'Cuz lots of efficient interchangeable workers in grim plaid uni-sex uniforms dash about, serving up them yummy Rax vittles.

Unlike its fast-food neighbors, Rax has pretensions to being a real restaurant, despite the snappy service and the ubiquitous drive thru window For instance, they serve a wider variety of food, such as fried potato skins and other fare not usually found in a fast-food joint. Not just the usual burger and fries staple. Also, each table holds, pinioned in place by the salt and pepper shakers, what is ostentatiously falled a "menu," even though this alleged menu does not list prices.

In any event, the food is fairly good and certainly more exotic than that of the typical burger joint. You get the feeling, however, as you sit and munch on a sandwich and listen to "1999" and pray the potted plant hanging over your head does not lose its grip on the ceiling, that you're paying as much for the ambience as for the (surprise!) green peppers in your "Philly Beef and Cheese" sandwich.

And, like, what totally bitchin' ambience, 'cuz like every socority girl that's any socority girl is here, scarfing up the

mega-veggies of the Awesome Salad Bar. Where else can you eavesdrop and learn who got like, polluted, at the New South Oyster Luau last night, and where Biffy and Brad went and why, and when the killer Finance final is

It makes you long for the days of the legendary Beer Town, immortalized in song, the landmark of the Strip until the Raxers got hold of it

But perhaps, years from now, when Beer Town is but a dim memory, perhaps Rax will be dirty and disheveled and bums will hang out there and character and chutzpah will be restored to the Strip.

Soviets cracking down on rock'n'roll

Now that a confirmed enemy of rock 'n' roll is in charge at the Kremlin, Soviet officials have stepped up their attacks on decadent Western music. The latest blast is from doctors who say medical research has confirmed rock has a "tremendously harmful psychic effect" on the human hody. As evidence, they cite rock concerts in the West, which, according to the official account, "rarely end without fights and brawls." The soviets' anti-rock campaign has been stepped up since KonstantinChernenko took over as party leader. Last June, he denounced pop music as causing "ideological and aesthetic harm."

A noted economist is calling for a new definition of old age Stanford professor Victor Fuchs says that, since today's 72-year-old has the same life expectancy as a 65year-old in 1935, why not raise the retirement age? Otherwise, he says, Medicare and Social Security costs could bankrupt the country

Jeff Lorber nearly ditched his musical training at Boston's Berkler School of Music for a beaker in a chem irs lab. But after a while the chem, al reactions were replaced to e again with his keyboard

A transcontinental move from Beantown to Portland. Oregon in the mid The proved to be lucky and wise for the struggling keyboard st. First of all, it broadened his musical outlook - learning to incorporate R&B, funk, latin rhythms and lazz into his work. Then after establishing his band, The Jeff Lorber Fusion, the fessty independent Inner City Records label signed them up in 1976.

Arista Records mapped up the Jeff Lorber Fusion and things got even better. Their fourth LP Wisurd Island tupped the number I position on the jazz charts and the follow-up album, Galassan (which featured Stanley Clarke on one of the cuts), was hailed as the number I album of 1981 by Record World magazine

With the release of the latest album, It's A Fact, Lorber has continued his growing fascination with funk. "Full Moon," one of the cuts from the album, boasts the nononsense vocals of Greg Walker

Though Lorber has drawn some flak from certain music critics and purist jazz lovers for his unashamed puree of musical styles—he has been delighting his growing number of fans for years now

Also, his live act is said to be pretty durn hot

Student Campus Entertainment Concerts brings the Jeff Lorber Fusion to FSU's Ruby Diamond Auditorium tonight at 8. FSU students with an ID may receive 2 tickets for free and the price of admission for the general public is $3. The FSU School of Music is offering musical recital attendance credit for the show.

Seminole baseball team still has time?

The Florida State baseball team has at least 21 games to play, but already the Seminoles are zeroing in on their worst record in nearly 10 years.

In 1974 Jack Stalling's team went 37-25, the most losses a Florida State baseball team has ever recorded for a single season. Stallings resigned as head baseball coach following the 1974 season

But this year's team, which is made up mostly of freshman and sophomores, is having its problems as of late.

"There is nothing wrong with this baseball team that a few wins can't straighten out," current baseball coach Mike Martin said.

But time may be running out for the Seminoles. Of the 21 games left, eight of them are on the road, including two against arch-rival Florida and three against Memphis State.

To top it off, the Seminoles are only 8-13 on the road

STANTIAGO, Dominican Republic - Atlanta Braves pitcher Pascual Perez, still predicting he can win 20 games this season, was freed from prison Monday but still faces a meeting with Commissioner Bowie Kuhn before he resumes

Perez, 26, was released from the San 1 un prison after Princeutor General Miguel Garcia Cordero decided not to

There is no one problem that has been playing the Seminoles this year. Instead, it appears that every facet of the Seminoles' game has failed them at one time or another

One game it may be the pitching, the next it will be the defense, after that it may be the lack of hitting that proves to be the tram's downfall.

"There's still time for this baseball team to revamp," Martin said. But he said, "if we don't turn it around this week, it's going to boil down to the Metro (Conference

"There are two big keys for this ballelub to be successful The pitching must improve and Tommy Zoeller must come back," Martin said

At this point in the season the Seminoles pitching staff is probably the team's major disappointment. Currently, the Seminole pitching staff posts a high 4 91 team ERA. That Turn to BASE, page 15 does not compare favorably to last year's 1 93 team ERA. In fact, the highest team ERA ever at Florida State was the 4.31 posted by the 1981 pitching staff.

The lowest FRA among the team's starters is freshman Ray Revak's 4.09 Revak (8-3) also sports the best record of any FSU pitcher

In his effort to shake some life into the pitching staff, Martin has sent senior Jeff Grav (24-12 lifetime) to the bullpen to be he team's short reliever. Taking Gray's place in the starting rotation is former eliever Doug Treadway Treadway (2-0, with nine saves this year) was 8 I with two saves out of the bullpen last year

Zoeller, the other key according to Martin, broke his wrist in a fight before the season ever began and has played in only five games this season. The sophomore first baseman hit 277 last season while playing in 49 games

It doesn't look good for a Zoeller comeback, according to Martin. Zoeller still suffers from a severe pain in his right wrist when he swings the bat

The Seminoles this year also lack the offensive punch they've had in the past years. So far this season, the Seminoles are hitting just 287-only three starters are hitting over 300. One of the few bright spots for the Seminoles at the plate has been freshman Luis Alicea, who set a Florida State record by collecting at least one hit in 27 straight games

Sophomore left fielder Frank Fazzini has also continued to hit the long ball Fazzini, who holds the FSU record for most home runs by a freshman, has hit 17 homeruns so

Mondale swamps Hart and Jackson in Pennsylvania

UNTITO PRENS INTERNATIONAL

PHILADELPHIA - Walter Mondale's resurging campaign swamped Gary Hart in the Pennsylvania primary Tuesday, the fourth big industrial state to back the former vice president's quest for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Mondale scored a solid victory in the Keystone State, rounding up the majority of the 172 national convention delegates at stake.

Based on early returns, it appeared Mondale had won at least 76 delegates, pushing his overall total past the 1,000 mark in the battle to collect the 1,967 delegates needed for the nomination.

"This is a big win," a triumphant Mondale said in Philadelphia "I think it helps us a lot. All this is helping me gain momentum toward the nomination and I believe toward the election."

"What is reassuring to me is I think it was very close a few days ago," he said. "I believe we had our debate. I think the voters of Pennsylvania bistened to that debate and decided rather heavily to vote for me. That's encouraging."

Mondale refused to rule Hart out of the contest for the nomination, saying: "I would anticipate several tough fights down the road. We've selected slightly over one half the delegates."

With 25 percent of the vote reported, Mondale had 171,919 or 47 percent, Hart had 135,408 or 37 and Jackson had 55,063 or 15 percent.

The loss by Hart, following convincing Mondale victories in Illinois, Michigan and New York makes it difficult for the senator to raise needed funds in the three-week hiatus in major contests before the Texas caucuses May 5

Jackson was getting 77 percent of the black vote in

Gary Hart expected to lose

Philadelphia, according to network exit polls, even though black Mayor Wilson Goode campaigned actively for Mondaie, Jackson has rolled up record votes in the black wards of the nation's major cities this year and two weeks ago carried Hartford, Conn

"I think the major thing always was to have Walter Mondale win" statewide, Goode said, adding that the Jackson vote in Philadelphia did not surprise him

Teachers' merit pay plan hits one more snag

UNITED PRISS INTERNATIONAL

Tests required for teachers to earn merit pay bonuses are available for fewer than one in five Florida instructors and the idea should be scrapped for a year, a teachers' union official said Tuesday

FEA United President Pat Tornillo repeated his call for a delay in the merit pay plan hours after state officials said only six of 18 tests examined last week were adequate to test instructors about knowledge of their fields

In another development Tuesday, a panel appointed by Gov. Bob Graham to come up with a merit pay plan released a report that backed many positions taken by the teachers' unions on merit pay.

Graham and the Cabinet adopted their own merit pay plan last month rather than waiting for the recommendations of the Florida Quality Instruction Incentives Council, which were due March I

Last week Graham and the Cabinet refused to back down on the requirement that teachers who earn the extra pay pass standardized tests on the subject matter they teach

At that time, Department of Education officials said they hoped to be able to use 18 National Teacher Exam tests that would be available for 60 percent of the teachers.

On Tuesday, DOE officials said they would be able to administer only six of 18 tests they had hoped to use. The other 12 tests were ruled out in a week long conference last week in Tampa, said Kenneth Loewe of the DOF.

Loewe said groups of eight to 12 educators reviewed each test to see if it covered enough ground and was difficult enough. A majority of each review team was made up of classroom teachers, he said.

The abandonment of the 12 tests shows Graham and the Cabinet rushed into the idea without planning carefully enough, Tornillo said. The effect would be to penalize the few teachers who do have to take a test and might fail, he said.

"The entire plan is so frought with inequities that it is just impossible for it to work," Tornillo said.

"Do we want only 10 percent of the teachers to be outstanding or is the goal of educational reform to make all teachers outstanding?" Tornillo said "Is the goal to improve the instruction of all students or to improve the instruction of only 5 percent or 10 percent?... Or is the goal political?"

A report released by the quality incentive council Tuesday backed several positions of FEA-United and the other teachers' union, FTP-NEA. The report said:

- Maximum bonuses under the plan should be $5,000 a year instead of $3,000;
- It should be possible to get a $3,000 bonus without earning a master's degree;
- Attendance should be removed as a factor in awarding the extra pay.

But the council's report differed from the union's positions on other issues.

It said the school principal should evaluate teachers instead of a three-person team of fellow teachers. It also recommended that performance of a teachers's students in

Wilder definitely sighted in California

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

LOS ANGELES—Christopher Wilder, the Australian race car driver on the FBI's Most Wanted list for a series of disappearances of women throughout the country, was in Southern California a week ago, the FBI confirmed Tuesday.

"This is the latest sighting," said John Hoos, FBI spokesman in Los Angeles. "He's right in our own backyard."

Hoos said the I'B1 "had a positive confirmation" that Wilder was at the Proud Parrot Motel in Lomita April 3 and that he checked out of the motel April 4

Wilder is possibly driving a 1981 Mercury Cougar, burnt orange with a vinyl top, Hoos said

Wilder, 39, a part-time race car driver and photographer, is suspected of raping and torturing women in five states, in addition to killing at least two vactims. Wilder approaches young women in shopping malls, identifies himself as a professional photographer and attempts to ture them into accompanying him for photosessions, said FBI spokesman Oliver Revell in Washington.

The FBI has described him as a "continuing active menace" and a "badly wanted fugitive "

Last week, the FBI disclosed Wilder had checked into a Last Vegas motel March 31 and left the following day, the day a 17-year-old beauty queen disappeared from that city

Michelle Korfman varished April 1 after leaving a magazine sponsored beauty contest. Witnesses said she was in the company of a man who fit the description of Wilder

In Miami last Friday, the FBI released a videotape of a 1981 interview in which Wilder discussed his "need to meet women." The tape shows Wilder discussing himself, his goals and desires.

Influenced by New Bedford case, House, Senate toughen rape laws

LATTED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

The Florida Senate sought to make it easier for children to report sexual abuse by parents Tuesday while the House approved tougher penalties for adults who sexually exploit children

Both chambers, reacting to the recent New Bedford, Mass., rape trials, approved longer prison sentences in gang rapes. The lawmakers also unanimously clarified the statutory rape law, to protect all 11-year-

The Senate also approved an extension of the statute of limitation in child-molesting cases, effectively giving young people until their 21st birthdays to report sexual abuse by parents or other relatives. Existing law requires judges to throw out cases if a child does not report sexual molestation within three years of the incident, but the Senate change would allow children to wait until their 18th birthdays before filing a complaint

Sen Robert Crawford, D Winter Park, said many children are afraid of their parents or dependent on an abusing adult and are therefore "reluctant" to tell of sexual exploitation. An amendment to his bill (SB 138) would start the three-year statute of limitation when a child reports abuse, or on the victim's 18th birthday-whichever is earlier

first degree felony for parents or legal guardians to have sex with children. The maximum sentence for sexually abusing a child would be 30 years in prison

Messersmith's bill (HB134) would provide the same penalty for having sex with a child under 11 or a mentally deficient young person. Like the Senate bill, it would upgrade prison terms for gang rapes

Crawford's bill started out in the Senate as a simple clarification of Florida's statutory rape law, making it a first-degree felony-punishable by 15 to 30 years in prison-to have sex with an 11-year-old child. Crawford said some courts have interpreted existing law to protect only children who have not reached their 11th birthday, while others have said it applies to children between 11 and 12.

Crawford's bill took the latter position Sen. Pat Frank, D-Tampa, amended the proposal to extend the statute of limitation on child sexual battery

Now, the statute runs from the time a child is molested," she told the Senate-"One in fourcases of child molesting occurs within the family, and frequently there is a great deal of rejuctance on the past of the child to disclose the incident within the family setting "

Sen Betty Castor, D-Tampa, amended Crawford's bill to upgrade the degree of felony involved in gang-rape cases. She said her amendment was prompted by the Turn to RAPE, page 9 रें)।।तिसीह (फिल्डमार्ज मिस्स LUNCH SPECIAL

Equal pay study needed, says House

UNITED PRESS IN FERNATRINAL

House committee Tuesday overwhelmingly agreed that Florida hiring practices should be examined to see if the state discriminates against women

The study would be conducted by a ninemember commission appointed by the governor and legislative leaders, under a bill (HB 671) approved 14-1 by the Committee on Retirement, Personnel and Collective Bargaining

"What we're trying to raise in this bill is not the answer, but the issue," said Rep. Herb Morgan, D-Tallahassee, the bill's

The pay-equity study is all but certain to pass the House easily. It counts most of the House leadership, including Speaker Lee Moffitt, among its 83 cosponsors The legislation is an attempt to avoid a lawsuit similar to one that could the state of Washington more than $800 million in back pay and higher salaries for workers who proved discrimination.

A study by the union that represents most state workers concluded last year that job classifications held primarily by women often are undervalued in relationship to those held by men, resulting in lower pay for the women who hold down the

According to the study, the average of the 20 most common female-dominated jobs had a top salary of just under $11,000, while equivalent male-dominated jobs topped off at almost $13,000.

The proposed Pay Equity Study

Commission would include representatives of public labor, private business, las citizens and government's executive and legislative branches

State agencies would be required to cooperate with the examination of hiring practices, with a report due to the governor and Legislature by March 1, 1985

"This is not a radical feminist issue," Morgan said "It is an effort to look at it intelligently

Morgan warned lawmakers to order the study themselves, or else risk having the courts demand it following a lawsuit

The only objections to the bill were voiced by the big business lobbying group Associated Industries of Florida

General counsel Mary Ann Stiles said

'This is not a radical feminist issue. It is an effort to look at it intelligently.' -Rep. Herb Morgan > businesses are worried about a "spillover effect" from any move toward legally established pay equity. She said Associated Industries is afraid lawmakers might look at the state initiative and decide to force it upon the private sector as well.

> "The underlying issue goes much further, and could ultimately affect all businesses." Stiles said

> Stiles said salaries are based on more factors than just comparable training of employees, including the supply and demand of the labor market.

> "We're not saying there are not inequities. But this concept will not resolve the question," Stiles said.

Solidarity

If Tallahassee seems unusually purple today, there' a reason. It's "Lavender Wednesday", the culmination of a week of celebration by Florida State University's Gay. Lesbian Support Services of more than ten years spent spreading the word that homosexuality is neither a stickness nor a sin. As a show of solidarity, the service is asking gay men and women and their supporters to wear the color lavender today.

That's a lot of people. Most researchers agree that one in ten Americans is homosexual, indeed, roughly 25 percent of American men are likely to have had more than a casual homosexual experience.

Their friends are also numerous, even though many potential supporters of gay liberation are unaware of the natural alliance between them and gays. Note that the people who now attack gay rights are the direct political descendants of the ones who told women that they were too frivolous to be allowed to vote, who told blacks that they were fit only to be slaves. The gay movement is part of a wider struggle for liberation from the suffocating social roles imposed on everyone — women and men, blacks and whites, gays and straights — by the wealths white men who run this country politically and economically

That power structure attempts to keep blacks "in their place" by denying them access to colleges, jobs and neighborhoods. It seeks to control women by denying them reproductive freedom. It uses similar tactics against gays.

The United States is one of the few Western democracies which still attempts to regulate consensual, private adult sexual realtionships in Florida, they call it the Unnatural and Lascivious Act. Under its provision, any person convicted of sodomy, fellation or cunnilingus could go to jail for 60 days and/or pay a $500 fine. That means straight people, too. That law is an unconcionable intrusion by government into the lives of individuals. Even though it is rarely enforced, its very existence is an affront to every notion of personal privacy.

But for gays the main problem isn't what the law does, but what it doesn't do. Florida has no law to prevent your employer from firing you for being gay — even if you aren't a practicing homosexual. It has no law to prevent your landlord from evicting you if you live openly with another gay as a couple.

The list of discriminatory laws continues, but the rights to a job and shelter are the first step in winning true equality. These are basic rights. The continuing denial of them to gay men and women is as much an act of terrorism as physical violence.

But these are only part of the arsenal of the psychological war against gays. There are also the lies — the perpetuation of vicious sterotypes and the myth of depravity. Perhaps the cruelest myth is that gay men are child molesters. That particular gem comes up every time a city or state tries to enact laws to protect gays' jobs, even though child molesters are more than ten times more likely to be heterosexual than homosexual. Why is that myth continually perpetuated? Why do we concentrate on the isolated tragedies like Arthur Goode, and never the Eudora Weltys, the Henry Jameses, the W.H. Audens?

This much is clear: gays will not be free as long as they remain frightened and divided and alienated from their allies. That's why the Gay/LesbianCounseling Services are asking you to wear the color lavender today whether you're gay or not. It's a small step, but an important one.

Remember, we're all fighting the same fight.

Letters

Double standard

Editor

I would like to seize this opportunity to corroborate a recent letter asserting that a disciplinary double standard between Greeks and non-Greeks is in effect at Florida State University

Earlier this semester, I made the grave mistake of shaking a galvanized street sign in front of Gilchrist Hall. Although the sign was not damaged or defaced in any way, I was nevertheless arrested by FSU police officers who witnessed my sinister "crime". Within two short weeks, I was convicted by the university's prudent and evenhanded justice system and sentenced to 150 hours of community service. Moreover, a letter of reprimand denoting my misconduct was permanently placed in my university records.

Why has the same system that "put me away" within two weeks been so slow to bring the notorious IFC gunslingers to justice? Does the university perceive non-Greek ugn shakers to be a more diabolic element than fraternity artillerymen? It occurs to me that fraternity membership is an unrestricted license to run roughshod over FSU's campus—a clear departure from the school's policy regarding non-Greeks.

Editor:

You can help TALTRAN continue its recent expansion toward the day when we will have an excellent transit system.

I have learned that we are within one or two votes in the Florida Senaie, and a handful of votes in the House from removing a law which keeps the state from helping fund operating assistance to local public transit systems like ours. Proceeding along another track is the Florida Transit Association's funding plan which would provide between $20 and 22 million statewide on a matching formula with local governments.

Only Florida and Texas, among the top ten populated states, fail to provide operating assistance to local transit systems, and it shows because we have the poorest transit service when compared with these states. Even states like Louisana, Missassippi, Arkanasa and Virginia give operating funds while we don't! And by 1990, we're going to be the fourth largest state in the nation with even more need for good transit service to be in place.

If the operating assistance is permitted and the proposed formula adopted, all systems can immediately grow in size by up to 50 percent. Now we know the public supports increased state spending for transiti confirmation of this fact is shown by a 1983 statewide poll conducted by FSU. Transit got the highest support of 13 major programs—5 percent! That's higher than the support for building highways.

Show your legislators you support going in a new transportation direction. Write/call/meet them and ask them to vote to repeal the operating assistance prohibition and to vote the necessary monies along the proposed formula.

As I am graduating this April, I thought it only appropriate to thank you for the hours of amusing and informative reading you have provided me with over the past several years. Without a Flambeau, classes would have been unbearable, the "joy of learning" having departed six years ago. The Flambeau has provided an invaluable distraction—without it I would have had to pay attention to the professor, and with the exception of Federal Jurisdiction, might have learned something. The purpose of graduate school, however, as everyone knows, is not to learn something, but to avoid working for a few more years (and with the job market the way it is, my 24-year sabbatical might be permanently extended)

The other purpose of this letter is to suggest that your paper include a column where right-wing individuals can publicize their ignorance. Although I generally sympathize with the Flambeau's views, I believe both sides of an issue should be presented-marketplace of ideas, as Holmes phrased it. I am unfortunately certain that there are hundreds of Reagan supporters who believe not only that ketchup is a vegetable but so are salt and pepper, and also that trees are a major cause of air pollution, the latter theory perhaps explaining the appointment of James Watt. In short, let us not forget that all of the thousands of civilizations that have existed on this planet have had two characteristics. One is that they were all different and the second is that they all thought they were right.

Expensive solutions to some remote worst cases

BY WILLIAM O. BEEMAN

The middle East has emerged as the second most important priority in the U.S. defense system after Europe. It will absorb an estimated $59 billion of the U.S. defense budget in fiscal year 1985, roughly 20 percent of all U.S. military defense expenditures.

However, defense of the Middle East is more than just costly. It is in many ways the leading factor in determining U.S. military priorities throughout the world.

These priorities are established on the basis of "worst-case planning." At present, the very worst case imaginable is a full-scale Soviet invasion of Iran, resulting in Soviet control of Persian Gulf oil fields. According to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, "The Soviet threat to Iran is seen as the most demanding threat." Indeed, he sees even the Soviet threat to NATO as "less urgent" than the threat to Iran.

Any U.S. effort to counter such an invasion would face enormous logistical problems, principally because no U.S. military installation in the region is large enough to handle the enormous military operation needed to counter a full-scale Soviet invasion.

Therefore, the Rapid Deployment Force, established during the Carter administration, has been expanded to cover this contingency. Regrouped under the newly established U.S. Central Command (CENTCOM), it already has fairly extensive resources available to it. These include:

 From the Navy, three carrier battle groups, one battleship-led surface action group, five maritime patrol air

 From the Air Force, seven tactical fighter wings and two strategic B-52 bomber squadrons.

 From the Marine Corps, one and one-third marine amphibious forces, consisting of a reinforced Marine division and a Marine aircraft wing (containing three times as many tactical-attack aircraft as an Air Force tactical wing).

The Defense Department estimates that a full-scale Soviet invasion of Iran likely would employ 350,000 troops. To counter this force, U.S. strategists see a need for a U.S. counterforce of 440,000 troops—twice the number currently committed to CENTCOM. Thus, full preparation for the worst case would require the doubling of total troop commitment, and the construction of new facilities to support this commitment.

According to a recent Brookings Institution report, "Deploying the (projected) 440,000-troop RDF would require shipping about 1.5 million tons of material from U.S. bases over 12,000 miles in six weeks' time"—in addition to shipping the troops themselves.

Such an operation would be larger than any other American military effort now being considered—larger by far than that required to counter a Soviet invasion of Europe, since the United States already has many thousands of troops stationed there

Since the Department of Defense has stated specifically that CENTCOM will require no new troop commitments, we must ask where the new troops will come from. In fact, they will be drawn from forces now committed to NATO. This creates yet another "worst-case scenario" to justify increased U.S. defense expenditures.

third in a series

In this scenario, the Soviet Union somehow would manage to attack both Iran and Europe simultaneously. U.S. troop strength clearly would not be sufficient to meet both challenges. To respond to this hypothetical threat, U.S. forces would have to grow by at least 200,000 soldiers—the projected shortfall in the CENTCOM lineup—or we will have to increase our reliance on the early use of tactical nuclear munitions, or both

Assuming one chooses increased manpower over increased nuclear weapons, the costs would be staggering—a hefty $20-plus billion in continuing annual costs for 200,000 new troops and their equipment. An additional $16.7 billion in one-time costs would be required to house and equip the new troops. In all, $37.8 billion would be required to meet every conceivable eventual threat from the Soviets in Europe and the Middle East—

Such calculations indicate the very high price we pay for structuring our forces to cope with the worst-case scenarios rather than for the most likely ones. While most analysis agree that the Soviets are not likely to risk World War III by invading the Iranian oil fields, this series of improbabilities is the primary justification for the large troop commitments and equally large expenditures in the region.

The question Americans should be asking is, "Is this approach really necessary?" Even the Defense Department agrees that the dreaded Soviet invasion of Iran is not a strong possibility—"a highly implausible prospect," Francis J. West, assistant defense secretary for international security affairs, told the Senate Armed Services Committee

And a Congressional Budget Office review of the probable costs of the RDF reports that numerous military analysts think the Soviets would invite great risk by attempting such an operation. "The administration agrees that limited regional conflicts or subversion are far more likely," the report states

The Marine forces which served in Lebanon were considered part of the CENTCOM troop contingent. Their effectiveness in that war-torn land may typify the best we are capable of doing in such internal conflicts. The sad truth is that the United States simply is not equipped for the kind of small-scale intervention which would help contain local conflicts such as the one in Lebanon.

Thus we have a very difficult situation at hand. The United States is poised on the verge of making an enormous financial and logistic commitment to a conflict that in all likelihood will never be fought. The more probable use of those same troops and facilities, to contain small conflicts in the Middle East, seems a thankless task—one for which we are unprepared, unenthusiastic and one which in all likelihood will gain us nothing.

HERE AND NOW BRIEFS

Trick or-treat diplomacy? While leading the U.S. delegation to the funeral of former Guinean president Ahmed Sckou Toure, who died earlier last month, Vice-president Bush found himself with time on his hands—80 minutes' worth, in fact—al a government guest house for visiting dignitaries. Not one for trivial pursuits, Bush abruptly left his quarters to see who else was staying at the complex. He later reported to President Reagan that he'd held unplanned bilateral meetings with several world leaders, including President Mohammad Zia ul-Flaq of Pakistan.

Central Intelligence Agency analysts are relieved that the U.S. has banned the sale of five chemicals to Iran and Iraq to prevent their use in the manufacturing of chemical weapons.

The ban only came about as a result of actions by one disgruntled C1A analyst, who leaked the story to The New York Times because President Reagan wasn't responding to agency briefings on the potential threat of Iraqi chemical weapon factories. The irritated analyst told several reporters here last week that it takes "large colored charts with big letters" to get President Reagan to respond to anything.

Senate rebukes Reagan over CIA's covert 'act of war'

WASHINGTON—The Senate handed President Reagan a sharp rebuke Tuesday, young overwhelmingly that the United States should not in any way be involved in the mirring of Nicaraguan ports.

The 84-12 vote came as the administration struggled to minimize damage to its policy in the wake of an angry backlash on Capitol Hill Key Republican senators complained bitterly about not being informed of the decision to proceed with the mining.

The amendment authored by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D. Mass, declared no funds should be used "for the purpose of planning, directing, executing, or supporting the mining" of Nicaraguan ports.

Kennedy agreed to withdraw a second part to the amendment, concerning jurisdiction of the World Court, after it became clear the Republicans were divided and seeking a quick end to what had become an embatrassing situation for the White House.

Kennedy's amendment was in the form of a non-binding "sense of the Congress" resolution.

Republican senators met in what was described as a storms session before the vote. Republican leader Howard Baker then went to the Senate floor to work out the agreement with Kennedy permitting a vote on his amendment.

In the House, Speaker Thomas O'Neill said members probably would agree to provide only half the $62 million in Salvadoran military aid approved by the Senate last week, and would reject any funds for the CIA sponsored rebels in Nicaragua. Reagan has said the money, including $21 million for the rebels, is urgently needed.

Shortly before the Senate vote, the White House issued a statement defending Reagan's Central America policy and saying a "shrill and often confusing debate" has obscured the president's aim in the region

The White House issued an unusual statement "to sei the record straight on our objectives, our policy and our actions"

The statement, issued by presidential spokesman Larry Speakes, denied the administration has any contingency plans to use U.S. combat troops in the region or escalate its secret war against Nicaragua if Reagan is re-elected.

'How can we

The document also took issue with members of Congress who complained of inadequate notification of CIA operations off the Nicaraguan coast and a decision to reject World Court review of U.S. actions in the region.

"To the contrary," the White House said, "all U.S. activities in the Central America region have been fully briefed in detail to the committees of the Congress."

The statement, endorsed by Reagan's top national security advisors, was released late in the day amid signs a hitter outcry among Republicans and Democrats in Congress could mushroom into a major policy disaster.

The damage control exercise, which included sending CIA Director William Casey and Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Dam to Capitol Hill, met with hitle immediate

The furor, growing since the initial reports of CIA involvement in mining two key Nicaraguaii ports, took on the appearance of a political firestorm with the revelation Reagan approved the operation in February without notifying Senate intelligence committee Chairman Barry Goldwater, R-Artz

"I am pissed off," Goldwater said in a blistering letter to Casey. "The president has asked us to back his foreign policy. Bill, how can we back his foreign policy when we don't know what the hell he is doing?"

The White House did not address the issue of the covert mine laying, but chose instead to last out at the "shrill and often confusing debate that has developed over our goals, plans and activities in Central America"

"Because this debate, much of it uninformed and unattributed, is obscuring the real situation," the statement

STATE

TAILAHASSEL—The Senate Rules Committee Tuesday approved a bill that would jerk the statutory base out from under a newspaper suit challenging closed-door legislative budget hearings.

The committee also approved a constitutional amenditient protecting legislators from libel suits for anything they say in performing legislative duties. The amendment would allow dismissal of "harassing" lawsuits brought by political opponents or constituents second-guessing the motives of a legislator's remarks.

The House-passed public meeting bill (HB 953) would repeal a Florida law cited by The Miam Herild and 12 other newspapers in an appeal pending before the State Supreme Court, challenging the Legislature's right to close its budget committee meetings. The law that would be repealed simply requires the House and Senate to abide by their own rules.

Ron to World Court: Butt out

L NITED PREM INTERNATIONAL

THE HAGUE. Netherlands - The United States, calling Managua's surt on the mining of Nicaraguan ports a "propaganda exercise," told the International Court of Justice Tuesday that it will reject any attempt to rule on the case.

Washington's notification was cabled by UN Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to the world court, a court spokesman said. "The Secretary General's note is a normal procedure in cases like this," the spokesman said.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman in The Hague said the United States had decided to suspend its recognition of the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice on cases dealing with Central America

"Washington has informed the world court it will not recognize its jurisdiction in Central American matters for the next two years, and it has also said Nicaragua is trying to make a propaganda exercise out of this." he said

In Managua, the pro-government II Nuevo Diario blasted the U.S. decision in an editorial published under the headline, Reagan The rationale of irrationality

The note was delivered to the court less than 24 hours after Nicaragua filed a suit against the United States, charging it was violating international law by mining ports and destroying bridges, hospitals and airports in Nicaragua.

Nicaragua demands an urgent end to "American undercover operations running into millions of dollars." Nicaraguan Ambassador to the Netherlands, Carlos Aguello, said after filing the suit Monday

In the past two months, 12 vessels, including Dutch, Soviet and Japanese ships, have struck mines in the Caribbean port of Il Bluff and in two Pacific ports, Puerto Corinto and Puerto Sandino

The CIA, hoping to expand support for rebels fighting the leftist Nicaraguan government if President Reagan is reelected, is directing mining of the ports of response to fears of a fall offensive by Salvadoran rebels, the Washington Post

The Reagan administration accuses the Managua government of aiding the leftist Salvadoran guerrillas

White House spokesman Larry Speakes, however, denied that the Reagan administration is engaged in a "holding action" that would lead to further hostilities against Nicaragua if Reagan is reciected

Nicatagua has hired two top international lawyers to act on its behalf at the world court-Abraham Chase, a Harvard law professor and former legal advisor to the late President John F Kennedy, and Ian Brownley, an Oxford University professor

The court spokesman said both Nicaragua and the United States were acting legally under international law and under the rules laid down by the court.

The next move, the spokesman said would be to decide on the ments of the case. Court officials have been working day and night to prepare full dossiers on it and to notify the court's full panel of 15 international judges.

Army denies massacre report

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador-The U.S. backed Salvadoran army denied charges by rebels Tuesday that government troops "massacred" 23 peasants in a guerrilla-dominated zone north of the capital

The clandestine rebel Radio Farabundo Marti vaid that forces of the Atlacatl Battalion, trained in 1981 by U.S. Green Berets, killed 23 peasants in the village of III Roble and one in Corazal, about 30 miles north of San Salvador

"Iwenty three humble Salvadoran peasants have been murdered by the Atlacatl battalion Twenty three peasants have been massacred," the rebel broadcast said

The rebels charged that some of the victims, including women, children and old people, were beaten and tortured before they were killed

The broadcast, however, was partially jammed by the government and no dates were heard regarding when the alleged killings occurred

But Defense Ministry spokesman, Capt Carlos Aguilar, denied the charge

Instead, he said in the only recent action involving the Atlacatl Battalion, its soldiers killed eight "terrorists" Monday near the town of Tenancingo, in Cuscatlan

Aguilar also said an undetermined number of guerrilla sympathizers had been taken prisoner and brought to San

The army investigates civilian guerrilla sympathizers and either puts them in refugee camps or frees them in an area away from rebel-dominated zones, he said

The pro-rebel civilians back the rebel cause and provide services such as cooking and laundry, an army spokesman said. They are the only civilians left in the rebeldominated area around the Guazapa Volcano, 25 miles north of the capital

I realize that this is an unorthodox ad, to say the least, however, it has occurred to me for some time that in a community such as ours there must be many very nice people who would like to explore a meaningful personal relationship yet lack any real opportunity structure for so doing

This is essentially the situation that I face. I am a 41 year old, well-educated, financially independent businessman, and president of a company with operations throughout the U.S. I am also a very involved single parent of several small children, and am at a point in my life where I have no inclination whatsoever to be involved with the superficiality and randomness of the whole dating and bar scene (Hence the ad.)

I am nice looking trim, a non-smoker and in good health I am also a warm and spontaneous person who tries to enjoy life to its fullest, while being responsible in the sense of treating others as I want to be treated

I would very much like to meet an attractive, intelligent, sincere and emotionally mature woman who shares my love of life, family and Tallahassee

House okays sexual harassment bill

LNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

A house judiciary subcommittee approved bills Tuesday giving a baitered wife the right to sue her husband and providing for the award of punitive damages to victims of on-the-job sexual har assment.

The first bill (HB 638) would abolish the doctrine of interspousal immunity—which prohibits apouses from suing each other—in cases involving assault, battery, false imprisonment, trespass to personal property, trespass to real property and conversion.

The legislation was sponsored by Rep. Art Simon, D. Miami. A more far-reaching measure which would abolish the doctrine of interspousal outright has been introduced in the Senate by Sen. Roberta Fox, D. Miami.

"All we're looking for here is simple equity." Simon said in support of his bill "All victims of crime - should have the same rights and dignity under the law."

The panel approved the measure after defeating an amendment by Rep John Grant, R-Tampa, that would have dropped the trespassing and conversion crimes from the bill.

Grant said the property issues were already covered under the state's divorce statutes and to include them in the new bill would be to encourage litigation as leverage.

in divorce proceedings

Rep. Pere Dunbar, R-Crystal Beach, objected, saying what would happen, if, for example, his wife maliciously destroyed a valuable coin collection he has owned for years. Under the amendment, he said, he would have no legal recourse.

The amendment failed 5 1

The bill also survived questions about possible fraud between spouses because it specifically involves intentional actions. Simon said their were no insurance ramifications to his bill at all to encourage possible fraud.

The second bill (HB 525) specifically defines sexual harassment as an unlawful employment practice under the Florida Commission on Human Relations and allows the commission to award punitive damages to injured parties

Some lawmakers questioned whether the bill should specifically state that punitive damages could be awarded, but Davis pointed out that other Florida laws have similar provisions.

Grant said the bill would be worthless without the provision for punitive damages

The panel also approved a bill (HB 422) by Rep. Betty Metcalf, D-Coral Gables, prohibiting employment discrimination by state and local governments against the handicapped

House nixes banks' 'floating'

I STILD PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Voting to send a message to Florida's banking community, the House Tuesdas unanimously agreed that banks should have to pay back interest when they hold up customers' deposits for more than a week

"We hope this message will get through and we won't have to do anything stronger next year," warned sponsor Rep. Tom Gallagher, R.-Coconut Grove

The House approved the measure 115-0 and sent it to the Senate

The bill (CS-HB 131) is aimed at the bank practice of "floating," or holding onto deposits for several days or even weeks without allowing depositors to make use of the funds

Banks argued they need the delay to make sure they don't get stuck with large checks that are deposited but later bounce

Gallagher countered that in an era of instant electronic financial transactions, banks shouldn't need the delay. He said banks wanted to continue the practice because they can collect interest on the deposited funds without crediting the money to the custome? vaccount

Massachusetts convictions of four men who assaulted a woman on a barroom pool table.

Florida law sets four degrees of noncapital felonies, with penalties ranging from five years to life, and rapes are classified in regard to the age of the victim and degree of force used. Under the Castor gang-rape amendment, offenses would be upgraded to the next-higher degree—doubling penalties—if more than one assailant was myolyed

Sen Richard Langley, R Clermont, withdrew an amendment that would have mandated some prison time for all rapists. He had said it was technically possible, though unlikely, for some first offenders to be freed on probation.

Crawford explained that new sentencing guidelines, going into effect this summer, will increase minimum first-offense prison sentence so that every convicted rapist will serve at least three years in prison—even with time off for good behavior in custody.

A raw but understanding look at an American dream decayed

BY PAT AUFDERHEIDE

Every once in a while, out from the American movie industry's fantasy factory comes something that looks a little more like reality, under a light dust of gritty glitter.

This season it's an offbeat independent film called Suburbia. Some say the movie will be the Easy Rider of its generation, others find it repulsive but it's packing houses in the few cities where it's playing.

The kids who've adopted the film show up to buy their tickets in safety pins and torn jackets, their hair spiked and teased and sheated to punk perfection. Tough as they act, scruffy as they look, many come straight from a spaghetti dinner around a suburban kitchen table and drive to town in daddy's car

This is their movie. They are the survivors of a great experiment in American life, the sprawling rows of tract housing that promised escape from urban grime and crime, that even seemed to offer an escape from old-style social

It didn't work out that way. The flight to the suburbs stopped, and a lateral motion set in, with workers moving between suburbs rather than into the city. When jobs shrink, and the family's independence starts to dissolve, the community bonds and social programs that might help are often too weak

In Suburbia, 1984 has come to toost in Southern California tract housing. Down those once peaceful streets drive a couple of white punks, their junker car spraspainted with an anarchist "A." They're angry, but they're not sure at what

As they cruise past boarded up houses, one quotes from his mother's 1968 diaty, praising their new suburban home, dad's safe job, and the neighborhood as "a good place to raise kuls."

But in 1984, the suburbs have become the slums of the future. Mom's an alcoholic, Dad's a homosexual, Buddy's a punk and a runaway - and Sis's only hero is Buddy. Wild dogs roam the streets at night, attacking small children

The only people with any answers seem to be the punks, who hand together against the lies of the past. Some take over an abandoned house and call themselves TR, for "The Rejected." Their sheets may be fifthy, their eating habits barbaric, their days IV obsessed. But they love each other, and that's what counts

Except that they're misunderstood. The laid off workers look at them like so many more wild dogs, and ask the local police to shut down their group house

What we have here is a failure of communication. Only one person wants to bridge it—the local cop, a black man who is also the stepfather of TR's leader. And even he can't keep had trouble from crupting at the end-

There's plenty of "action" -a Doberman tears a baby apart, punks strip a young girl, laid-off workers joyride with shotguns. But the movie also portrays the collapse of the American dream with compassio

The laid-off workers are not just vigilantes, they are also people who resent having been jettisoned from the ranks of useful citizens, who understandably feel put down by kids busting up rummage sales and raiding their garages. The kids are angry at being excluded from an affluence they had been taught to expect.

The only group the film has no sympathy for are parents who take out their frustration on their kids.

Director and scriptwiiter Penelope Spheeiis made Suburbia because, she said, "The youth movement is a batometer for social, economic and political conditions The film was intended as a response to the California daydream films like E. I. present

"I grew up in tract housing, and I know it's grueson out there," Spheeris says. "People are angry and frustrated now. Their lives aren't working out the way they hoped. And they're taking it out on their kids "

Spheeris met Los Angeles punks while making a documentary about their subculture, and invited them to star in Suburbia, where the only professional actors are

Punks who worked on the film are happy with the results. "Everyone involved was worned it would be sensationalist," says Grant Miner, who plays a drug addict and in real life is a punk and rock musician now studying journalism at Occidental College. "But its attitude is quite realistic

Kids in the audience seem to find it accurate. A Washington, D.C., punk said, "I thought some of the acting was crude, but the sense was right. The film showed that being a punk is an attitude—generally being against conformity

Some people deeply dislike the film, though parents, for instance. "One said to me, "I walked out of that film and I wanted to hit a wall," " recalls Bert Dragin, an Ohio

An engrossing look at a possible future

BY JACK WILKINSON

Warday by Whitley Stricher and James Kunetka (Holt, Rinehart, Winston; 374 pp., $15,95)

H arday is a haunting look at someone else's nightmare

As horrifying as nuclear destruction is, its consequences can be more frightening. Sometimes living is a great deal tougher than dying. That is the theme of this engrossing fictional odyssey that reads like fact, one that makes a strong argument against war.

Imagine this without warning, on Oct. 29, 1988, at 4:20 p.m., Russia detonates missiles over North America Minutes later, the United States retaliates. There is no second strike, no one is left with the authority to order it. The first nuclear war in history lasts just 36 minutes. Six million Americans are dead. But, over the next five years, 70 million more die because of that horrendous half-hour.

Co-authors Whitley Strieber and James Kunetka, each successful in his own field (Strieber does fiction), Kunetka non-fiction), have blended their talents to give us an all too believable look at what could be the future. Handled in the first-person narrative, with themselves as the central, survivorss for now characters, they take us on a journey across a nuclear ravaged land. Like Dante trudging through the underworld, they find horror, despair and a flicker of hope.

Through observation, interviews, government documents and reports, official and otherwise, we learn that disease and famine are sweeping the land in the aftermath of the holocaust, though only three areas of the country actually were hit. In addition to lingering radiation there is enormous pollution problems ignited by firestorms. Medical guidelines decide who, among the war injured, should be cared for and who should not. Those with a high level of radiation are now "triaged," denied medical help, left to die. There are reports of grotesque mutants preying on the unsuspecting

The United States as we know it is gone. Washington has been flattened; New York wrecked and abandoned. There is no central government any more and little desire to restore it. The economy is badly crippled. Surviving states are now going it alone, even printing their own money in some cases, acting as separate entities. A new Hispanic nation, bragging of a Utopian "enlightened socialism," grabs off South Texas and talks about going to war with the California gringos.

California, meanwhile, relatively untouched, becomes a police state where illegal aliens can be shot on sight. The Japanese influence is everywhere, they even move the entire

Los Alamos atomic plant to Osaka

In the end, things are beginning to come back to some sense of normakey. Life, such as it is, goes on. The narrators look in retrospect at the war, "fought not by us, but by innocents disguised as ourselves, who in their fury, forgot how fragile we are." The U.S.R. is gone, but so is the U.S.A., old hatreds literally vaporized. Wistfulls, "I wish we could reach back through time and heal our relationship."

restores social peace, bridging the generation gap.

The reason he succeeds is simple—nothing is really wrong. The kids aren't really rebellious, just exuberant. Their parents don't really have problems, they're really just confused.

town in the grip of conservative religion. By organizing a school dance over the minister's objections, the hero

Footloose may reassure us that the strains on the American family have just been one big misunderstanding, but it essentially just exploits the social tension it refers to froncalls, it's the "exploitation" film, Subuebia, that explores the culture in crisis and subcultural responses. And in the process it suggests that maybe, just maybe, we can't go home again.

The author is a contributing editor of In These Times and writes on film and cultural topics for such publications as The Village Voice, American Film, Harper's and Columbia Journalism Review.

businessman who financed the low-budget feature

And some young people criticize the film. In Santa Cruz Calif., "They called it violent, homophobic and misogynist," says Dragin. "And they kept saying it was "not P.C.," or politically correct.

 Punks might be proud of that characterization. As Spheeris says, "Each new generation is trying to create an identity. And in this society, each one has to be brand new and totally original."

What is remarkable, then, is that Suburbia draws its coergy from its familiarity. For all their loud music and haircuts and rejection of authority, the punks in the film basically want "a good home." If the suburbs and their families won't provide it, they'll carve out their own.

It's the oldest theme in America's youth films. In Rebei Without A Cause, nearly 30 years ago, the problem wasn't really the kids, but the parents.

A bar's decor affects the amount you drink

There may be some truth in that old saying about fancy restaurants. "You can't eat the decor " But researchers have found that, in a bar, the furnishings do affect how much the patrons drink University of Minnesota Anthropologist James Schaefer says people drink more in places with dim lighting, action photographs on the walls, and slow crusic on the jukebox. Consumption goes down in places with large dance floors, landscape paintings or dress codes. Schaefer also found the heaviest drinkers are people who are alone or in groups of five or more

From grade school through college, females are still facing bias in the classroom. That's the conclusion of researchers David and Myra Sadker, who claim discrimination begins early in life, when teachers call on

When it comes to literature, teenagers are more interested than their elders in the nitty gritty of life From Stephen King to Robert Ludlum, escapsis fiction dominates the adult best-seller list. However, there are exceptions 10 my Menudometal theory AC/DC is an exception

Who can resist the guilty pleasure of dusting off a copy of Powerage and cranking it up on the apartment tinbox until the neighbors concede to any demand you wish? A good Bon Scott (the band's late lead "vocalist") scream is capable of vicariously working out your pent up BERICKSOD.

Accept, a heavy metal threat from Germany, is almost up there with AC DC In fact, lead screamer Udo Dirk schneider's banshee howls are sometimes a dead ringer (no pun intended) for Bon Scott's.

Dirkschneider is a squat little fellow who sports camouflage clothes and seems to have a rather charming, wacked-out wit about him. On their video to the title track. Herr Dirkschneider saddles and rides a gigantic wrecking ball through the side of a brick building for a hilanous finale hey, this is fun stuff.

"Balls to the Wall," with luck released somewhere as a single, is one of the best Heavy Metal songs ever It's nasty, nearly threatening and right up there with ACIDC's "Highway to Hell" Dirkschneider hollers, hoots and does a Marlon Brandoesque sing mumble while a chorus chants a slow dirge lifted from the Wicked Witch of West's slaves (remember, "oh wee oh, eee oh wee, oh wee oh wee?"").

The rest of the album doesn't maintain the energy of the title track but it makes Van Halen look like a backvard teaparty For the fans of HM, Accept is highly recommended. For those with milder tastes try to procure a copy of the title track -just for the hell of it.

Music for Parties. Silicon Teens (Sire Mute)

The album lives up to its name.

This is actually a compilation of singles from the underrated Silicon Teens (found it as a cutout at Vinyl fever - a Canadian import no less). The Teens have labored away in quiet obscurity for the splendid independent Mute Records label since the late '70s. They, along with synth wizard Fad Gadget, pioneered synthpop.

Udo and the boys

IN THE MIX

While Coary Numan C'Cars' and all that rubbish) changed the oil in his mechanical heart and gave synthesizer music a cold, bad rep. The Teens were toving with humorous cover versions of rock classes Their deadpan wit and accessible cuteness made Chuck Berry's classic "Memphis" sound new and fresh (they also redo old Kinks and Berry Gordy, Jr. songs, among others

If you are fond of the German minimalist sounds of Trio ("Da Da Da") you'll love the Silicon Teens You'll also discover that Trio borrowed a lot from the Teens, Soft Cell also can be accused of petty pickpocketing. The Teens were just a little ahead of their time

"Song to the Siren" This Mortal Coil (4AD)

Yes, this is yet another rave about 4AD

Elizabeth Frazer, the lead singer for the Cocteau Twins as well as This Mortal Coil. has one of the most compelling and unique voices I've heard in years (no kiddin')

"Song to the Siren" features Frazer's mesmerizing vocal style accompanied by a single chord change on a synthesized guitar. The effect is mesmerizing. It sounds like a call to prayer from a minaret. It takes a few minutes before you realize that Frazer's vocals are in English

The video, if you're lucky you can catch it on a late-night MTV programming error, is equally gorgeous. Frazer stands in a pile of fallen leaves and sings-it's so subtle it seems new ("Gosh, who would've thought a song could outshine visual presentation?")

Revak shuts out Mercer, 6-0

The baseballs were flying all over the place in Seminole Stadium last night, but

Mercer just couldn't seem to put enough hits together to score any runs. The Bears (12-10) rapped out 11 hits, but could not get a ungle runner across home plate.

And so Florida State's Ray Revak picked up his ninth win as a Seminole as he led FSU to a 6-0 win over

Revak (9-3), a freshman from Key West, pitched his third shutout of the year But things were never dull On the night he gave up 11 hits-two more than his teammates could

"Ray pitched very well," ISU coach Mike Martin said. "He gave up a few more hits than I'm sure he wanted to."

Revak was the benefactor of several good. defensive plays by the Seminoles. In the second inning Mercer's Mark Halsel was thrown out at home plate when he tried to score from second base on a single

The ninth place hitter for Mercer, Pete Stroer, laced a single to center field, where center fielder Eric Mangham relaved the ball to first baseman Jimmy Jones, who gunned the ball to catcher Jose Marzan Halsel was tagged out by Marzan on a bang bang play at the plate

Mercer's Berry Veal was also thrown out at the plate. Veal tried to score on a shallow ungle to left field in the fifth inning, but he was easily thrown out by left fielder Frank

"I had a little problem keeping the ball down," Revak said. "They got a few hits, but they didn't score any runs and that's what counts

The Seminoles (34-19), on the other hand, were able to make good use of their nine hits.

In the first inning, FSU's Fazzini crashed a two-run homer over the center field fence to give the Seminoles a 2 O lead

Drew kosco scored the Seminoles third run in the third inning, when he walked and then advanced to third base on Luis Alicea's bunt. He then scored when l'azzini hit into a double play

Marzan wored the Seminoles' lone run in the fourth inning after being walked. moving over to second base on a walk to Mangham and scoring on a Kosco single

The Seminoles added two more runs in the sixth inning on two hits

Martin said he was pleased with the Seminoles performance at the plate, but added the hitters need to show a little more discipline at the plate

For Mercer, the losing pitcher was starter Chris Pearson Pearson allowed four runs on just four hits over four innings. His record drops to 2-3

The two teams square off again today at 3.30 p.m. at Seminole Stadium. Jeff Ledbetter (2.1) gets the start for the Seminoles

Seminoles finish 17th day of drills

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS

For the first Tuesday this Spring practice, the Florida State football team was able to work out. Every Tuesday has seen rain cancel each attempt by the team to practice

Rain still threatened throughout, but the Seminoles were able to complete what head coach Bobby Bowden termed "one of the best practices so far."

"This wasn't had for a Tuesday practice," Bowden said. "Usually when you come back from a Saturday scrimmage, everybody looks a little sluggish. But I thought we had a pretty good practice."

The Seminoles seemed to be putting most of the elements of their game together Tuesday, especially the defense. On several plays, the defense slipped in a blitz, thoroughly confusing first unit quarterback Kirk Coker. The junior from Perry threw several interceptions in the early going, and was also sacked a ciniple of times while running the option. "I thought I had a pretty bad day today," Coker said after practice. "They put in a new defense and changed their secondary piverage a bit. I got a better grasp toward the end and threw a few touchdowns. They sure blitzed a lot.

Most of those TD passes went to wide receiver Hassan Jones. "I thought Hassan looked like he caught a few passes todas," Bowden said. "I thought he did a good job. Henry Taslor made the best play of the day with one of his tackles, I thought."

"We've been working on the fundamentals so much this Speing that perhaps we haven't looked that smooth," Bowden continued. "But we learned a little bit today about our team. We're still trying to learn, it takes time."

This was the 17th day of the 20-day Spring session, which will culminate Saturday in the annual Garnet and Gold game at 3 p.m.

Bowden said after last Saturday's scrimmage that this year's game will be different from previous games. Instead of trying to divide the squad up evenly in terms of first and second unit players. Bowden said the first unit will go against the second unit defense, and then the first unit defense will take on the second unit offense.

Putt Putt...

For some reason the weather always turns chilly when the intramural putt putt fournoment is scheduled, and last Thursday was no exception Twice rained out in the preceeding ten days, fifty four "bundled players putted through eighteen holes. Steve Winton aced eight holes to take the independent trophy home with a score of 28. Jim Hackett topped Winton's ace total by one to win the "hole-in-one" champion tishirt. Tracey Thomas won the independent women's division. Detta Zefa's Sally Graeff shot 39 to tie Tri Detts. Shirley Dodd for low score in the sorority division. DZ teammates Marietta Frison, Liz Gray and Tammy. Davis had scores in the 40's to give Delta Zefa the team title.

All-Racquet

Two weeks ago fen men and five women vied for the honor of the best. All-Racquet: player on campus. Racquetball was the first challenge, followed by badminton, table fennis, and finally fennis karren Newman was the easy winner in the women's division as she swept the top spot in all four sports. The men's division proved a bit tougher. Doug Kirkland and Dave Cundy both started slow each earning only a few points in racquetball. Then Kirkland won the badminton title only to have Cundy win table tennis. The All-Racquet liftle came down to the very last tennis match between Cundy and Kirkland. The winner there would take it all. The 6.5 victory for Dave Cundy gave him the points needed to edge Kirkland for the championship.

It's Hospital Day in the Legislature. The Life Flight helicopter has landed on the piazza (just in case) and there's a big orange sign "Florida - a State of Health

There are a couple of bills knocking around a House committee today designed to smack the hands of medical palaces that increase their budgets up through the ionosphere. Poor Rep. Ogden, a tireless supporter of CSHBs 506 and 965, is laid out in a hospital bed-hostage of the industry. A martyr to his heart attack, Ogden's missing the fun (Carl's captivity is vindicated—the bills pass) There's a long row of tables loaded with tomato roses and asymetrical lilly arrangements parked amidst the edibles. You think hospital food red jello and squash puree, right? But Saga ("Professionals in Dietary Management") produce strawberries and melon baskets full of fat fruit, brown bread and crudites as big as baseball bats. Dead healthy

Tallahassee Community Hospital has a colorful display on Knee Anatomy It shows pictures of "Common Knee Problems" and a video of open knee surgery. Are knees a common legislative health problem? Is it all that nearprostrate begging and genuflecting that goes on in unsunshined midnight meetings?

Through the new Capitol glass doors, a choir in tail coats is singing white-bread gospel, enunciating with WASPprecision "No more a-weeping and a-wailing." The boys wear long trousers and the girls are in shorts and black tights like cocktail waitresses. Their knees seem in good shape

Up on the fourth floor, things are quiet as a convent. House and Senate aren't in session. In their little withdrawing room, the senate pages don't have much to do. They aren't like ordinary humans. They are guarded like Spanish virgins. You have to have permission from the Sergeant-at-Arms to even speak to them. You have to be chaperoned by their duenna. She sits there by the door and sometimes answers questions for them. (There's Jeff and Steve, a girl in the corner with butter-colored hair, all in navy

fourth in a series

BY MICHAEL T. KLARE

Since World War II, U.S. strategists have generally seen Latin America as a backwater, and it has been allocated only a very small proportion of military expenditures. Now that picture is changing-and all of Latin America, and Central America in particular, is viewed as "vital" to U.S. national security interests, and U.S. military spending in the region is

Until recently, the United States deployed only minor military units in the area-in the Panama Canal Zone, at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba, in Puerto Rico and Bermuda Althouth the Pentagon does not break down expenditures by region, this existing commitment probably costs some $3 billion per year-or about one percent of all U.S. defense

This relatively modest expenditure was justified on the grounds that Latin America posed no significant peacetime threat to U.S. security and in the event of a major U.S. Soviet conflict would not constitute a major theater of war

Recently, however, this view has changed "It is becoming increasingly clear," the Joint Chiefs of Staff noted in their "Military Posture Report" for fiscal year 1983, "that a secure hemisphere is no longer a foregone conclusion and that the U.S. must now play a more active and enlightened role in hemispheric affairs

This shift reflects several events—the 1979 Sandinista takeover in Nicaragua providing Cuba with its first ally on the Latin American mainland, the growing boldness of leftist guerrillas in El Salvador, and the 1982 coup by Maurice Bishop in Grenada which provided Havana with another friendly regime in the Caribbean

The new U.S. outlook also reflects an altered view of the relationship of Central America and the Caribbean to U.S. global interests. Because a large proportion of U.S. oil and mineral supplies pass through the Caribbean basin, and because these same "sea lanes of communications" (SLOCs) would be used to supply allied forces in Europe and the Middle East in the event of a major war, some U.S. strategists now suggest that the Soviets would attempt to sever these lines in a major conflict

Although this hypothesis has been questioned by other strategists, Pentagon officials now regard apparent Soviet-Cuban successes in the region as a threat to U.S. global security. The Joint Chiefs' 1983 report, referring to oil transport through the area, say SLOCs in the area "are essential to the successful defense of Europe

This view is now official White House doctrine "The Caribbean is a very important passageway for our international commerce and military lines of communication," President Reagan declared in his "Star Wars" speech last March-an argument he repeated in announcing his decision to invade Grenada in October.

A second "global" security factor is the belief that a U.S. failure to prevail in Central America would be perceived as a sign of weakness, thus inviting challenges to U.S. interests

SG budget set to clear administration hurdle

BY DEBORAH HARTLEY

For awhile it looked as if funding for two positions at Florida State University - one clerical and one in maintenance - might have been the snag that hung up the new 1984 '85 budget passed by the FSU Student Senate last

There was no provision in last week's budget for two positions at the ISU Union, positions which in the past have been funded by student government from student activities and Service fees. The salary for both positions totals approximately $30,(11)

S.G. President Tom Abrams has said student government couldn't go on funding salaries at the FSU

Union because cost-of-living increases voted in by the Legislature year after year were eating up more and more of the A&S budget. That was the same reasoning that led student leaders to cut the money student government was allocating for the FSU Health Center in another part of the A&S budget

Apparently, the Student Senate agreed with Abrams - it voted not to fund two parttime and two full-time positions at the Union next year

But when the Student Senate Appropriations Committee met on Tuesday, Bob Brandewie - aide to FSU Vice president for Student Affairs Bob Leach - asked the

I would hope, simply out of courtesy, we'd give people more than a few months notice before we told them they didn't have a job.'

- Bob Leach FSU Vice President for Student Affairs

ommitte to pass a separate bill guaranteeing funding for the Union jobs. Brandewie's proposal would effectively have altered the student government budget by replacing the funds

Student Senate President Ed Brosman initially reacted with anger - he thought Brandewie's proposal was an attempt to circumvent the normal budgetars process

But on Wednesday afternoon, Abrams and Leach met and reached a compromise that apparently satisfied both administrators and student government leaders

"We're not going to fund the part time positions," said Abrams, "but we will fund the two full time positions through next year. After that, Dr. Leach has given me his personal guarantee that he will pick up the funding for those positions

I each said he hadn't seen the final budget - that lands on I each's desk after it is signed by Abrams - but he was aware of the problem with the unfunded Union positions

I each agreed that student government "has the right to decide what positions they will fund," but he said he asked S.G. to fund the two full time positions through next year for "humane considerations.

"I would hope, simply out of courtesy, we'd give people more than a few months notice before we told them they didn't have a job," Leach said "If they will fund the positions through next year, I'll try to find the money for the year after that from somewhere,"

Leach said he thought that with the two Union positions funded through next seat, the new student budget should clear the hurdle with ISU administration

Abrams said he would sign the budget Wednesday night.

New program to retrain teachers drastically short o

A new program to retrain teachers in math, science and other specialized fields through tuition credits and loans doesn't have enough money for its first year, education officials said Wednesday.

Barbara Goltz, associate deputy education commissioner for administration, told aides of Cabinet members a firstcome first served basis will be used to decide which teachers get money to go back to college for training in the specialized

"There are many more applicants than we will be able to handle this year," Coolty said

Yvonne Burkholz, a lobbyist for a teachers' union, Florida Education Association United, questioned the "grossly insufficient" funding of the program, which is known as the critical staff shortage progam.

"It's very demoralizing to go through a whole process and then be told 'Sorry, there's not enough money," Burkholz said "You've got to keep sour commitments to the people you've made your promises to

Burkholz later met with I ducation Commissioner Ralph Turlington, who she said might push to reimburse teachers from next year's budget for retraining programs they entered when the program began in January

Coltz said that about 500 teachers had applied for tuition reimbursement. But only $100,000 was allocated for that program, which breaks down to $200 per teacher

A way of life

Franklin County has problems

It is one of the poorest counties in the state. Oyster fishing is the only large-scale form of economic opportunity available to Franklin County residents. Oyster fishing is as much a way of life as it is employment. Now, even that is being endangered.

A steady stream of sewer spills and heavy rains has prompted the state Department of Natural Resources to close the Apalachicola Bay and keep it closed since March 21. As a result, the fishermen in the area have stacks of mortgage payments and utility bills to pay but no money to pay them following their long spell of unemployment.

More than 60 people from Franklin County came to the Capitol Tuesday to tell their troubles to the Legislature. They told their Legislators that they need money—not promises—to help them make it until the Bay is reopened.

We hope the legislators note the urgency of the matter and take steps toward alleviating the problem. Because heavy rains were partially responsible for closing the Bay, there is the possibility of obtaining federal disaster relief. Gov. Bob Graham and the Legislature should pursue such with vigor and persistence.

Also, this situation provides a fine opportunity for volunteer organizations such as civic organizations and churches to put their principles in action and lend a hand

State officials say the Bay could be reopened by Friday if test results show no contamination from the sewer runoff. If so, it is not a moment too soon, as long as there is no potential harm to anyone. If there is contamination, the Bay should remain closed. The public's health should not be endangered, but neither should the existence of a way of life in Franklin County. The state should do everything in its power to aid the cystermen and women of the Apalachicola Bay area.

HERE AND NOW

Colleges fight Pentagon over secrecy

BY MAXWELL GLEN & CODY SHEARER

WASHINGTON - Officials from academe and the Pentagon squared off last month in an often heated discussion of proposed government controls on campus based research activity. The meeting accentuated differing views on what constitutes justifiable restraint on academic work stemming from government-sponsored projects. It also suggested that the two sides are far from reaching a resolution.

At issue was a new classification plan drawn up by Defense Department officials to restrict the flow of information gathered during work on Pentagonsponsored research projects. It also suggested that the two sides are far from reaching a resolution.

At issue was a new classification plan drawn up by Defense Department officials to restrict the flow of information gathered during work on Pentagonsponsored research projects. Universities receive 50 percent of the department's basic research dollars and about one-quarter of its exploratory and development budget. From the government's perspective, the high volume makes campuses and faculty members valuable resources for the technology-starved Soviets.

The Pentagon would divide the two types of research contracts into "sensitive" and "non-sensitive" categories. Anyone planning to publish an article or present a paper at a conference using information drawn from a "non-sensitive" project would only have to agree in writing to give a copy to the government simultaneously.

Spin-offs drawn from a "sensitive" contract, however, would require advance submission to the Pentagon of no less than 60 days in the case of basis research and 90 days where an exploratory and developmental project is involved. Any article or paper in the latter category would require Defense Department approval before submission to a publisher or conference.

Pentagon officials especially worry that work on very high-speed integrated circuits (VHSIC), a revolutionary computer technology, could fall into the wrong hands. And the universities say they'd be happy to let government officials review potentially sensitive works in advance.

Yet college administrators want no part of a requirement that would allow outright Pentagon prohibitions on publishing certain work. They contend that Pentagon classifiers will tend to overestimate the national security implications of government sponsored research. They add that the flow of information among U.S. scientists could be stifled, and so with it America's precious technological lead.

"Nobody wants to compromise national security," said an official with the Association of American Universities. "But, as a matter of principle, to require prior approval up front in a contract is unacceptable to the institutions. If it's going to work, (the Defense Department) will have to come to a system that relies more on voluntary compliance."

Professors may now buy insurance policies to protect themselves in the event that a student files suit over a failing grade. The program has been underwritten by the American Association of University Professors, National Education Association and American Federation of Teachers.

Former interior secretary James Watt has eretreated from the spotlight, but not from Republican politics. Watt, who is now affiliated with the Heritage Foundation, in Washington, has already signed several GOP fund-raising letters since leaving office. Watt quickly became one of the party's top draws for speaking engagements upon joining the administration in 1981.

Congress now has before it some 30 bills intended to discourage merger mains in the oil industry, and most of the sponsors are Republicans. "I can see Rockefeller, Mellon and the rest wringing their hands now, wishing that they, too, could play in today's version (of monopoly)," said Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass, on the House floor recently.

In 1983, the single largest television advertiser in the local/retail category was McDonald's Corp., according to the Television Bureau of Advertising. The hamburger chain spent $105 million for promotion on the tube.

At last count, Iran's revived Islamic system of justice had left 1,700 Iranians with one arm each Since last March, when the ancient law codes were reinstituted, there have also been 2,600 executions.

Campaign trail turns West

Walter Mondale, enjoying a delegate lead of 2-to-1 in the battle for the presidential nomination, moved his campaign westward Wednesday but continued his pounding attack on Democrat Gary Hart and Republican Ronald Reagan.

Speaking at a St. Louis Chrysler plant for the April 18 Missouri caucuses the day after his hig Pennsylvania win, the former vice-president reminded the workers that Hart had opposed federal help for the ailing Chrysler Corp, while he had championed it.

"If Ronald Reagan had his way, this plant would be closed," Mondale said. "If Gary Hart had his way, this plant would be closed. It is the human thing that is important here. The lives of thousands and thousands of fine Americans are better because we worked together."

Mondale continued his insistence that he is not the Democratic front runner. He told reporters, "I think we're making substantial progress. I'm not taking anything for granted.

But there was evidence from the Republican side that Mondale is regarded as the clear leader in the Democratic race. President Reagan, also appearing at an auto plant in Missouri, turned his fire on Mondale's alliance with organized labor.

In Pennsylvania, Mondale scored a landslide over Hart even though Jesse Jackson peeled off 17 percent of the statewide vote and carried Philadelphia.

The next major stop on the Democratic swing will be Texas, which holds caucuses May 5. There are some smaller contests first - the Arizona and North Dakota caucuses this weekend, Missouri's on April 18, Vermont's on April 24 and primaries in Tennessee and the District of Columbia on May

Limbering up for the fall campaign, Reagan went to Missouri in what was billed as a non-political trip and hammered away at Mondale's support of domestic content legislation, a bill that would require foreign car makers to use American manufactured parts in cars brought into this

At a Ford assembly line in Claycomo, Mo., Reagan said a combination of government deregulation and his economic policies were responsible for the turnaround in the domestic auto industry.

"Some advocate far harsher measures," he said. "They believe we should run up the flag in defense of our markets, embrace protectionism and insulate ourselves from world competition. But we'll never meet the challenges of the '80s Turn to DEMOCRATS, page 9

Farrakhan warns press, hails Hitler

WASHINGTON—Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan warned reporters Wednesday that "the judgment of God is fast approaching" them and proclaimed Adolf Hitler "a great man_wickedly great."

Farrakhan also said he welcomes a federal investigation into whether he violated broadcast laws by threatening Washington Post reporter Milton Coleman for revealing that Jesse Jackson referred to Jews as "Hymies."

*The judgment of God is fast approaching the Fourth Estate," he told a news conference.

The Black Muslim leader met with reporters following a

Chicago Tribune report that the U.S. attorney in Chicago had started an investigation into the alleged threat against

"I'm very happy for the probe and I welcome it," he said. In a March 11 radio broadcast, Farrakhan called Coleman, who is black, a traitor for revealing that Jackson, in private conversation, had referred to Jews as "Hymics" and New York as "Hymietown." Farrakhan said traitors are ounished with death.

Farrakhan is a supporter of Jackson's Democratic presidential candidacy, and Jackson has been criticized for not spurning the Muslim leader's support.

I liked the parade

I have enjoyed reading the Flambeau for some time now and feel I should respond to D.k. Roberts' article published Monday, April 9 entitled "Springtime and the tacky are in

Surely the several thousands, including myself, that lined Monroe Street on Saturday for the parade do not agree with one person's opinion of all the activities of that day Tallahassee is a beautiful city and one to be proud of and not written about in a derogators way. We do not have many parades here and how one person could write their feelings and then the Hambeau to publish it is a mysters. Was this the consensus of all editors? Did Roberts mill among the people and see the smiles on children's faces and enjoyment of others as the parade passed and enjoyed the test of the

We have a city we should be proud of and are allowed the freedom of speech and movement that others are demed. So Roberts can write what he she feels, however, rest assured those of us who appreciate beauty thoroughly enjoyed the parade and other events that had been planned very carefully and with a lot of hard work involved. Perhaps D.K. Roberts. should be given assignments other than "clean fun things" to have to cover. Just a suggestion

TALLAHASNIF — A House committee approved a bill Wednesday toughening sanctions for driving a boat under the influence of alcohol, but an Orlando lawmaker succeeded in preserving some current sking regulations

The legislation introduced by Rep. Barry Kutun, D Miami Beach, would make operating a motorbest under the influence a first degree misdemeanor with penalties similar to auto DUI cases. Current law makes boating while under the influence a second degree misdemeanor.

Kutun's bill would also have made it illegal to water ski under any bridge or ski with fewer than two people in the boat. Both provisions were struck from the bill through amendments introduced by Rep. Bruce McI wan, R Orlando

Ed bill 'overwhelming' legislators

I STEED PRINCISHERS A GOS AL

Rank and file legislators complained Wednesday that a bill sponsored by House leaders which orders major reforms in middle schools was being pushed through too quickly for them to understand it

"I'm a little distressed because I'm receiving calls from constituents asking what's in the bill and I have to tell them I don't know about and haven't seen until an hour ago a bill I'm voting on this afternoon," said Rep. Art Simon, D. Mianu.

"The whole issue is pretty overwhelming and I don't want to read in the papers tomorrow that the teachers are going bananas," added Rep. Thomas Harouri, D.Jacksonville

At issue was a bill labeled Progress in Middle Childhood Education, or PRIME, which is sponsored by House Speaker Lee Moffitt

Simon, Hazouti and other lawmakers who are members of the House education committee but were not in on the drafting of the measure were the ones who said they had insufficient time to consider it.

The bill (PCB-HB 830) seeks to upgrade a wide range of programs for schookhildren in grades 4 through 8 liestablishes a state advisory panel to keep an eye on those grades and is designed to improve the quality of teaching in middle schools

Legislators see the measure as an answer to the RAISE bill passed last year to enhance senior high schools and similar efforts for children from kindergarten through grade 3

Moffitt appointed a task force that spent two years reviewing middle school education and came up with a set of recommendations that are in the bill, said committee chairwoman Eleanor Weinstock, D-Palm Beach

Weinstock repeatedly reminded committee members who complained about the pace of the mark-up session that the bill is sponsored by Moffitt, who as House speaker is the most powerful member of the chamber.

Once the bill leaves the education committee, it still must pass the appropriations committee, the full House, Senate committees and the full Senate

Drop-out rates at senior high schools could be cut, say bill sponsors, by earlieth identification of potential drop-outs while they are in middle school. Rep. Mary Figg. D-Lutz, wondered where the money for such a program will come from

The committee amended the bill so that middle schools can eliminate a physical education requirement in grades 6, 7 and 8.

State to make it tougher for employees to earn college credit

BY MICHAEL MOLILNE

The Florida House's Higher Education Committee Wednesdas turned down a move to make it easier for state employees to take free classes in Florida's universities, but gave Tallahassee Reps. At Lawson and Herb Morgan a chance to try again.

HB 844 would create a tuition refund program for the state employees who register for job-related courses. Under the terms of their current contract with the state, career service employees are allowed to register for up to six credit hours per semester, free of charge, so long as their supervisors agree the courses would help them do their state jobs better.

The problem, Lawson said Wednesday, is that the courses state employees are most likely to take—public administration and business courses, for example—are also in high demand among fee-pasing students. As often as not, Lawson said, the employees have to wait on the end of the line for places in class.

Mary Pankowski, Florida State University's assistant vice president for University Relations, rold the committee that as many as one-third of the state employees who try to register for university courses under the current "feewaiver" system are turned away.

The tuition refund program would treat the employees like fee-paying students. The employee would pay his or her own tuition up front and be reimbursed by the state at the end of a semester—provided the employee maintained a Caverage. The new system would let university departments know up front the true demand for courses—that is, the demand by both fee-paying students and eligible state employees—so that they could add course sections if necessary.

FSU Vice-president for University Relations Pai Hogan also backed the proposed. "The current program hasn't seemed to work to the advantage of employees or the institutions." Under the new program, he said, "State employees would have equal access to courses on a first-come-first-serve basis, because they're paying for them."

The benefit to the universities, Hogan said, would be reimbursement for the administrative costs of having the fee-waiver students in class—that is, reimbursement to the time professors spend with them after class, for the supplies they use, and for other sundries. Hogan could not estimate how big or small a financial burden that places on universities.

The proposal would not necessarily mean a windfall for FSU or Florida A&M University, Pankowski said, even though as capital city institutions they are literally surrounded by state employees. The state maintains offices all over Florida, she said, this year, 20 percent of the state employees taking part in the fee waiver program attend the University of South Florida in Tampa, 12 percent attend Jacksonville's University of North Florida; 30 percent attend FSU.

The affect on Tallahassee universities was even further deflected when the committee accepted an amendment by Rep. Betty Easley, R Largo, to extend the bill's benefits to community college students.

Financially, the bill's impact on the state coffers is still unknown, according to Lawson in the first place, the new program wouldn't begin until July, 1985; also, the bill's supporters are still uncertain how state employees would react to the plan, since it would require them to pay tuition pending successful completion of courses. Lawson's best estimate is that the bill would cost the state between $2.5 and $3 million a year. The state employee union supports the Lawson-Morgan bill.

Lawson defended the bill as a way to give state employees a fringe benefit in fact, rather than in theory. "We have right here (in Tallahassee) 22,000 state workers who watch the Legislature every day," he said. "Every time they go out and try to take classes to enhance their educations they are turned down."

Pankowski said the bill would enable state government to compete with the private firms which offer their employees tuition reimbursement programs.

But the committee was not convinced. It defeated the bill 11-6, but Rep. John Thomas, D-Jacksonville, saved the day through a parliamentary maneuver.

House leadership decries CIA 'terrorism'

WASHINGTON-The House Foreign Affairs Committee, following the lead of the Senate. overwhelmingly approved a resolution Wednesday opposing any U.S. involvement in the mining of Nicaraguan ports

The non-binding resolution offered by Rep. Michael

Barnes, D-Md, was passed on a 23-1 vote and quickly cleared for action by the full House Thursday

Republican controlled Senate, in a rare to President rebuke Reagan's Central American policy voted 84-12 Tuesday for a similar amendment opposing the mining

The House committee vote same as Speaker

Thomas O'Neill condemned the U.S. mining of Nicaraguan ports as "terrorism at its worst" and Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd accused the C1A of lawlessness

But a key State Department official told Congress the mining was justified because if was carried out in "self-

In a related development, the House called for a House Senate conference committee on a bill providing $21 million for CIA backed Nicaraguan rebels

We don't have any other options. If Congress cuts the funds, the operations will end once the surrent $24 million has been expended," a CIA official said.

The official said it would not be surprising if the money ran out next week - as some news reports have speculated it Will.

D'Neill, D'Mais, told reporters the aid request for Ne aragina "doesn't have a charice" of being approved. He said previously Reagan might get about half the $62 million the same bill provides for emergency military aid to 11

He denounced CIA Director William Cases for the mining operation, calling it "terrorism at its worst." He charged Casey has "taken liberties that no other member of the CIA has ever done before

Byrd, D-W Va , charged the CIA violated international law by assisting the rebels in mining Nicaraguan ports and that it violated U.S. law by failing to inform Congress of the operation. A CIA spokeswoman denied the agency failed to inform Congress adequately of its activities

Byrd also expressed concern about reports suggesting President Reagan didn't know of the mining

"If he didn't know, it scares me. If he did know, it scares me," Byrd said "Who's in charge if he didn't know? If he did know, why did he enter into an act that is in violation of the international laws?"

Sen Barry Goldwater, R-Arie: in a letter to Cases complaining about the CIA's failure to inform him about the mining, said Tuesday that he had learned Reagan signed an order authorizing the operation

O'Neill said it was "unbelievable" Cases did not inform Goldwater, chair of the Senate intelligence committee. He said, however, that the House intelligence chair, Rep. Edward Boland, D. Mass., was aware of the plan.

The White House took pains to avoid the Nicaragua issue as Reagan set out on a two-day trip to Kansas City and Dallas

During lunch with workers at a truck plant outside Kansas City, the president was asked for his reaction to Tuesday's 84-12 Senate vote on a non-binding resolution calling for a halt to the U.S. sponsored mining—the first time the Republican controlled Senate has rebuiled Reagan over Central American policy

You don't want to hear," he told workers

Deputs Secretary of State Kenneth Dam defended the mining the the U.S. refusal to recognize the World Court's jurnsdiction in any disputes with Nicaragua

Dam refused to confirm the mining operation but responded in general terms to charges from members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the mining was an

Contras claim they captured key town

MANAGUA, Nicaragua US backed rebels claimed Wednesday their forces took control of a southern town in fierce battle, while junta leader Daniel Ortega hailed the Senate's condemnation of the mining of Ne araguan ports

Some 400 U.S. backed rebels of the Costa Rica-based Democratic Revolutionary Alliance, or ARDL, battled their way into the center of San Juan del Norte, a town of 6,(XX) some 230 miles southeast of Managua, a guerrilla spokesman said

In a telephone interview from San Jose, Costa Rica, the spokesman said the rebels, had caused 30 casualties among Sandinistas defending the town, but did not give details on how many were killed or wounded

Radio Impacto of Costa Rica, a private, independent station, broadcast a later rebel claim that the town was seized after a 24 hour battle in which 250 Sandinista soldiers were defeated

A Defense Ministry spokesman in Managua said the ministry had "no knowledge" of the attack

ARDI, headed by former Sandinista hero I den Pastora, known as Commander Zero, has an estimated 2,000 to 1,000 combatants supported and financed by the CIA

The ARDI spokesman said the rebels have taken several towns along a 10-mile stretch of the border between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and control 2,340 square miles of Nicaraguan territory

Barricada, the official newspaper of Nicaragua's ruling Sandinista Front, quoted Junta Coordinator Daniel Ortega hailing the "energetic way in which the American legislators have come out against the mining of Nicaraguan

The Senate voted 84-12 Tuesday to approve a nonbinding "sense of Congress" resolution introduced by Sen-Edward Kennedy, D-Mass-, saving U.S. funds should not be used to "plan, direct, execute or support the mining of the territorial waters of Nicaragua."

Rebels of ARDF and the Honduras-based Nicaraguan Democratic Force have mined the Pacific ports of Corinto and Sandino as well as El Bluff on the Atlantic coast

Minor right-wing party endorses Duarte

I NITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador - Jose Napolean Duarte, whose far right opponent in the Salvadoran presidental elections considers him a communist, Wednesday received a surprise endorsement from a small right-wing party.

Duarte, of the moderate Christian Democratic Party, will face far-right leader Roberto D'Aubuisson, the candidate of the Nationalist Republican Alliance, or ARENA, in a May 6 runoff.

The Popular Opentation Pary, called POP, ran a fullpage newspaper advertisement announcing its decision to support Duarte in what political observers considered an unexpected endorsement

POP is the smallest of El Salvador's eight parties and got only 4,677 votes of the 1.4 million cast in the March 25

The endorsement was considered more of a moral victory than a meaningful swing in right-wing support for Duarte, considered a communist by D'Aubuisson and his backers.

with that kind of defeatist mentality."

The recession that caused high unemployment during his first years in office, he said, was a result of 20 years of problems and not subject to a "political quick fix. There's no compassion in snake-oil cures," he said, apparently referring to the programs of his Democratic opponents.

The latest count by United Press International - with Pennsylvania delegate returns still incomplete - showed that Mondale has the backing of at least 1,070 of the 1,967 he needs to win the nomination. Hart had 568 delegates and Jackson 152. Another 333 are uncommitted.

With 97 percent of the vote Pennsylvania reported, Mondale had 710,115 or 47 percent, Hart had 527,469 or 35. percent and Jackson had 251,220 or 17 percent.

In Denver, Hart offered his supporters the kind of pep talk a coach might deliver.

"We are heading into the second half," the Colorado senator told his followers. "This campaign is going west and going south - we're heading into our territory, folks."

He predicted "long bombs, end runs, flat passes and reverses" in the second half.

In Washington, one of Hart's campaign aides said Pennsylvania was a long way from the end for his man.

Michael Levy, in charge of delegates for Hart, said, "The press and all the political pundits counted us out in October, counted us out in January; they said we couldn't pull it off after Iowa. They've been wrong before and we're just going to keep plugging away."

Levy said the Hart campaign felt "by June 6, after the California primary, neither candidate is going to have enough committed delegates votes solidly locked into place to solidly claim the nomination."

He predicted the nomination will "swing on the way the unpledged and uncommitted swing." That, he said, will depend on the perception of which candidate can best beat

Jackson accomplished one of his major objectives coming up with a strong enough showing to solidify his standing as the prime bargaining agent for black concerns at the convention.

"We've won a great victory," Jackson said of his Philadelphia win.

Appearing on television Wednesday morning, Jackson disputed suggestions racial harmony has been threatened by his "Hymic remark" and a Black Muslim follower's threat of retaliation against a black journalist who disclosed Jackson's use of the word.

"The massive black vote must not be seen as a threat, it really does spell had news for conservatives," he said.

Farrakhan has said his statement was not intended as a threat of physical harm to Coleman and his family, but rather, as a spiritual warning

He said Wednesday the Koran teaches that "traitorous" actions like Coleman's will one day be subject to divine judgment and punished by death

This is the context in which I gave my strong rebuke to Milton Coleman. I asked that he be shunned as a member of our society as a means of reforming his conduct," he said

Farrakhan said reporters should have investigated his remarks before concluding he had threatened Coleman's life

'Although my clear statement that no physical harm should come to Milton Coleman was ignored by most of you to further your own purposes, I want the world to know that the lives of Milton Coleman, his wife and his family are sacred to me." he said

"For a living Milton Coleman reformed is an asset to us as well as to America," he said

What bills have interested you so fur?

Steve: Weil, Tuesday we sat in on a Rules Committee meeting with this controversial—what was that one on?

Jeff: They wanted to take interest out of a prisoner's trust fund for restitution for when things got stolen by other prisoners and we thought about the restitution part that that was pretty wrong.

Here's a controversial one. You know what happened the other day in Starke. How do y'all feel about the death penalty?

Jeff: I'm against it-

Steve: - I'm not -

Jeff: I just don't think people have any right to take away anybody's life even if that's what they did. (The girl in the corner leaves). I just don't agree with that.

Stevei I'm for it. I mean, there's more people doing these outrageous crimes and the death penalty is the punishment for it. There's a lot of people that get off on crimes and they can plead, you know, insane, and this and that, and they come out of an institution and do the crime again. Yeah, I'm for it. I'm not saying I want to see people killed but if they do something that has that sentence, then you know, so be it.

So has working in the Legislature changed your beliefs about the process, democracy and all that?

Steve: Oh no, no. It's basically affirmed my beliefs. 12: 10 p.m. Hospitul Day Continues.

Allen Morris cats strawberries. The Down Holmes Hospitality bluegrass outfit from the Holmes Regional Medical Center in Melbourne play musical bedpans and clog dance. Looks like they know bow to have some big fun at that hospital. A cold wind is blowing as I watch the melon baskets empty.

One of the pages materializes and says: "Look I didn't want to say this up there in front of all of them but I want to tell you something. I don't totally agree with all that about the senators knowing what they're doing and doing their homework and stuff like that." The page goes on to say that the other day in the Senate it was like most of them didn't even pay attention. Maybe, the page says, it was because none of the bills were all that controversial. Maybe they're only interested in certain one that concern them. It's hard to know what to think with all of them talking and playing and voting for each other. "It's like they didn't really care that much," says the page.

I say thanks. It's nice to see a cynic in embryo. The page dissapears. They're not allowed to be gone unaccounted for for too long. Maybe that one'll go into politics. Maybe he'll be elected governor some day. On second thought—no. He knows better.

elsewhere in the Third World "If we cannot defend ourselves there," Reagan told a joint session of Congress in April 1983, "we cannot expect to prevail elsewhere. Our credibility would collapse, our alliances would crumble, and the safety of our homeland would be put at jeopards."

Armed with these arguments, the administration proposes a vast increase in U.S. military commitments to the region.

It is impossible to gauge the exact dollar cost of this buildup, partly because Pentagon procedures mask regional costs, but also because the administration has chosen to conceal many aspects of the U.S. presence in Central America.

This concealment is particularly true of Honduras, which has emerged as the centerpiece of U.S. strategy in the region. In the process of conducting one joint exercise after another, there now is a permanent U.S. military presence there estimated at 2,000 officers and combat specialists, in addition to two Air Force-operated radar stations and a squadron of reconnaisance planes.

Military construction units also have built or improved six airfields and constructed a variety of other military facilities. Still more facilities will be constructed during "Operation Grenadero-I, scheduled from April until July, when joint U.S. Honduran "Big Pine" maneuvers begin again.

No figures have been provided on these operations. The Department of Defense is "absolutely refusing to come forward with any figures" on the Honduras buildup, an exasperated congressional and complained recently. However, a reasonable estimate would be $2.50 million to date, with perhaps another $2.50 million planned for fiscal 1985.

A full accounting of U.S. military spending in the region also would have to include:

 Military assistance, entailing a request of $373 million in fiscal 1984 and $256 million in 1985, with the largest amounts going to El Salvador ($183 million in fiscal 1984) and Honduras ($79 million).

 Military exercises, including the nearly yearround maneuvers in Honduras, which probably cost about $500 million per year.  Secret paramilitary operations against the Sandinistas, absorbing some $80 million a year in direct costs. However, with indirect costs—such as logistical support for the "Contras" and their CIA advisors—the total probably is closer to $250 million annually

 Finally, a portion of the U.S.-based Rapid Deployment Force (RDF) that is available for possible invervention in Central America and the Caribbean Although it is impossible to put a precise figure on this contingent, since RDF forces in theory can be deployed anywhere in the world, it does not appear unrealistic to assign about onefourth of the total force—a commitment of approximately $15 billion per year

With the $3 billion originally committed to the region, plus the other outlays in Honduras. El Salvador and elsewhere, the full cost of expanded U.S. military involvement in Latin America comes to approximately $19 billion. Even this figure, however, must be considered as just a starting point if current administration plans for a continuing U.S. buildup are implemented.

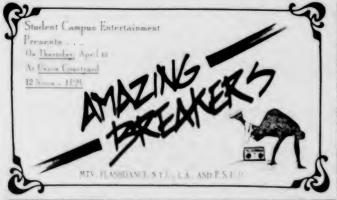

Although the full extent of these plans has not been revealed, basic administration thinking is reflected in the Kissinger panel report released in January. This panel fully endorsed the view which holds that the region harbors "vital" U.S. security interests and calls for an unprecedented expansion of military and economic and

"The 1980s," the report said, "must be the decade in which the United States recognizes that its relationships with Mexico and Central and South America rank in importance with its ties to Europe and Axia."

Should this perception prevail, the U.S. military commitment to Latin America could rise dramatically from the approximately $19 billion today to the $50 billion to $60 billion now devoted to East Asia and the Middle East.

The writer, a former official of the Department of Defense, is professor of International Relations at Georgetown University.

'Hard to Hold' hard to take

BY JONELLE TURNER

Hard to Hold, Rick Springfield's film debut, begins with a polgnant lesson in wooing rock stars: never pant after them, never pander to their exotic tastes; and never accept a braind new Volvo from them no matter how badly they smashed your old one.

We first find rock superstar James Roberts (Springfield) in San Francisco. where he is winding up a concert tour to begin work on a new album. The night of his last Hig Gig, he, fleeing a squashy mob of fans dressed to Go-Go, smashes into Diana Lawson's (Jamet Eiber) Volvo.

This accident sets into motion a most predictable plos, wherein we discover that rock stars aren't really that hard to hold — it's those prissy child psychologists who toot about in battered Volvos.

MOVIES

Throughout the rest of the movie, Jamie pursues Diana Why? Presumably because she follows all the rules, right down to rejecting the shiny, new you know what James parks in her driveway.

But is this move about real backstage sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll? No, no and no. Where there should be sex, there is (ugh) real love and where there should be drugs, there are only bottles of Dom Perignon. And where there should be rock 'n' roll, well, there is only Rick Springfield, a k.a. Dr. Noah Drake, who, for all his hot licks, cannot seem to step out of his white lab coat and get down to the dirts business at hand.

James Roberts, whose most disarming feature is his charming cackle, is little more than the New Bowie gone Maas Brothers Gear Shop

The film has only one real rock 'n' roll treat — Patt, Hansen, who plays Nicki Nides, Roberts' song writing partner and ex wife Of course, being a regular of the Rolling Stones backstage entourage and recently betrothed to Keith Richards, this Bride of Frankenstein has trained all her life for this role. And she is splendid. She is mean, she is nasty, she is a rockin', rollin' bitch. She is the evil force James Roberts must reckon with.

But he cannot reckon with her and so falls into a creative funk. Can't cut the album! Got two monkeys on my back, Real Bitch and Real Love! Real rock 'n' roll dilemma, man!

This dilemma becomes the focal point of Roberts' final number in the movie, his concert performance of "You Better Love Somebody" The song is not only Roberts' message to Diana, but more importantly, it marks the end of his creative block as well. Throughout this unimaginatively edited sequence, however, director Larry Peerce never seems to acknowledge the connection between the song and Roberts' artistic crisis. Oh well, we'll leave that to MTV or something.

Though Hard to Hold is designed to showcase Springfield's talents, it really shows only two things. 1) Rick Springfield has very pretty buns and in fact dozens of Tally Valley girls crooned goocy OM GODz every time they thought Rick was about to flash full frontal nudity, and 2) Springfield's funky hairworks should earn him a place in the Rod Stewart Hairdo Hall of Fame.

A conversation with author Barbara Milton

BY GEORGE FLEMING

Last weekend marked the first time Barbara Milton was a guestspeaker at a writers' conference. It proved to be a very busy initiation. During Florida State University's annual Spring Festival of Writers, Milton read her short stories, participated in panel discussions and fielded questions from an audience dotted with veteran and would be writers. The rest of the weekend included attending dinners, autographing books, even making a trip to Wakolla Springs.

Her appearance here adds further proof Milton is a writer who deserves recognition. A resident of New York City, she presently divides her time between teaching and writing. She holds a masters degree in education from Harvard University and has been teaching math at the Manhattan Country School since 1972. Her published writing includes short stories and an interview with Margaret Drabble in the Paris Review. Her stonies have also appeared in Some and Quarto magazines. Both Swallow's Tale and Sundog will publish her work in forthcoming issues.

Milton has received the most recognition for A Small Cartron, a collection of four stories published by Word Beat Press, which was founded by local writer and entrepreneur Allen Woodman. In the current edition of Sundog, FSU Inglish professor Douglas Fowler wrote of A Small Cartoon, "There is every reason to assume that Barbara Milton's first collection is the beginning of a remarkable career."

Shortly before returning to New York City, Milton answered a few questions posed to her by the Flambeau

Flambeau. How did your reading go?

Milton "It turned out well. I missed my ten o'clock flight and I had to take a later flight, so I arrived one minute before my reading. That turned out kind of nice because I got to come in and start. My ansiety was more over getting there on time than on how I would come across."

Hambeau. What do you think your audience came away with from your appearance at the festival?

Milton "It was an interesting audience. I think of it largely as ferminine, except for the faculty and staff. I got the feeling of very young women and of much older women who were writing. The young ones were almost too timid to come up and say anything. The older women were really touching because they would come up to me as if I had some truth to impart to them. Obviously it meant so much to them. Their emotion was all in their eyes. They have already devoted a number of years to their writing and they wanted to talk to me about it. Not that what I caid was all that important, but it seemed important to them."

Flambeau. What are your impressions of the FSU creative writing program?

Milton "I was very impressed. First of all, I'm impressed by the kindness of these people, then I picked up David Kirby's book (Suruh Bernhurdt's Leg) and it was such a pleasure to read those poems. You sort of wondered why they went outside the university to get speakers. I know Allen writes wonderful things. I haven't read Doug Fowler's S.J. Perlinan book, but I'm interested in reading it. It seems as if you have a young, talented and energetic group. It's good for New Yorkers to see this."

Flambeau What is your opinion of Allen Woodman as a publisher?

Milton "I think he's saintly. It's wonderful he's doing what he's doing. Of course I'm very appreciative, but it's not just me. I'm very suprissed at how many of my friends entered the Word Beat contest. These are people who want to sell bug, but they did this because they heard me talk about what a positive experience this has been for me. Allen has an enormous heart. I think he's promoting me out of an incredible graciousness rather than any business motivation. His meticulousness is really impressive. He's a writer-oriented publisher. Look at the way he promotes A Small Cartoon, sending out 85 review copies. He sends me copies of everything and mails me. Christmas cards. I really feel cared for."

Flambeau. Is there a trend now for writers to publish more in regional presses?

Milton "That's apparently true Writers are taking small presses much more seriously. I don't really perceive them as stepping stones. It has made me take myself more seriously, that I have a right to give myself more time to writing."

Flambeau Would vou be satisfied having the majority of your work published by small presses?

Milton "Well, I would have to say the first time I always send stories to the New Yorker, then to the Allianse and then I send them here. I try to reach as large a market as I can. As far as a novel goes, I'd start out with the major presses because financial freedom is what I'm aiming for, If I could sell a novel. I wouldn't have to teach."

Flambeau Is the key then for the small presses to offer more money to writers?

Milton "It would be wonderful if they could. If I could make the kind of money I'd like to make, I would be delighted—and prefer—to work with someone like Allen than to go through a huge, unpleasant network like Doubledte."

Flambeau Were you brought up in a literary environment?

Milton "My father was an English major at Princeton, so what he really loved to do was read to me. His favorites were Edward Arlington Robinson, Robert Service and Robert Browning Their poems were dramatic monologues, so it wasn't just pure poetry. It was story-telling poetry. My mother was a journalist and wrote columns for a newspaper. My father also wrote these beautiful letters, which I think constinced my mother to marry him.

Frambeau. What are some of your highbrow influences?

Milton "I love the Russians. Those are the writers I read when I was in high school. Dostoyevsky, Pasternak, Tolstoy. I love some of Eudora Weltv. I like writers who are very quiet and straightforward about themselves.

Flambeau. And lowbrow influences?

Milton. "I watched most of the movie Lace and I realize what you have to do in your fiction to keep people reading is to have some big question that will be answered at the end of the book. You have to have some misstery in it. So I enjoyed watching Lace from that angle. It was easy for me to sit through all that drivel because structurally it was very clear what the author was doing."

Flambeau What do you like least about being a writer?

Milton "I think the worst part about it is you get so selfabsorbed and cranky. You end up missing so much. There is always that problem between your art and your life, and the way you take from one to give to the other."

Flambeau And the best!

Milton "If I had some free time, I used to spend it waiting. And I'd go nuts. I don't mind it anymore because now I can use it for writing."

Seminoles thrash Mercer, 13-2

BY JOHN HOLECEK

When all was said and done, it wasn't pretty, but at least it was over

Florida State used a seven run first innihe and easily beat Mercer 13.2 Wednesday afternoon before a sparse crowd of 103 at Seminole Stadium

Starter Jeff I edbetter (3-1) picked up the win for the 35. 19 Seminoles Ledhetter pitched a strong five innings, allowing only one run on three hits. Ledbetter, was never in any real trouble, giving up just one extra-base hit - a solo home run by catcher Craig Gibson in the second inning

In reality, the ballgame was over after the first inning. A total of 11 Seminoles came to the plate and rapped out six hits - the big one being left fielder Frank Fazzini's three run homer over the 400 foot sign in center field - and five walks off of two Mercer pitchers

Starter Shane Haygood, who entered the game with a 0-2 record and an 11 20 carned run average, lasted only one third of an inning and could only manage to getone out of the first eight Seminole hitters out. Havgood (0.3) was lifted for Marion Devton, but he also had problems getting anybody out. Deston allowed three runs - just two being earned on five hits over 1 2 innings

All told, Mercer used five pitchers - the most effective being Mark Halsel, who came in from shortstop and pitched hitless ball over the last two innings

Several of the Seminole hitters had an entire career at the plate against Mercer. Catcher Vince Insogna was 3 for 4, with three runs batted in, while first baseman Jimmy Jones was 3 for 5 Sixteen different Seminoles collected 15 hits in 18 at bats

"We're playing with a lot of confidence," FSU coach Mike Martin said

Martin said it was important that the Seminoles are playing with confidence, because of the upcoming series with architival Miami - a team which has beaten FSU three out of the four times they have played this year

The two teams will square off for a three game set at Seminole Stadium this weekend. Doug Little (6-5) will start for the Seminoles Friday night, while Doug Treadway (2-0) will start Saturday and Ray Reval (9-3) will start Sunday

The times of the Eriday and Sunday games have been changed. The I riday game, originally scheduled for 7 p.m., will begin at 8 p.m., while the Sunday game will start at 1

FSU women sign 5; Cliette to rejoin team

Florida State's women's baskerball program added five signatures to the roster Wednesday as the Lady Seminoles inked one player for each position

Felicia Black, a 6-foot forward from Pensacola Junior College is the only junior college transfer among the signees Regarded as one of the top junior college players in the state as a freshman, she was slowed by an ankle injury during most of last season. Black was all-conference and all-state in junior college, averaging 15 points and 10 rebounds per game

An all-state volleyball and basketball player at Santa Fe High in Gainesville, Black averaged 28 points and 12 rebounds her sensor year

Jan Piatnik is listed as one of the top 16 female basketball players in Florida high schools. The 5-5, point guard from Lakewood High in St. Petersburg was an allconference and all-district selection. She averaged 14 points, seven assists, and five steals a game. Listed in the top 40 of the BC Scouting Report, Piatnik scored 1,344 points in her high school career. One of the most highly touted players in Florida, she was recruited by Georgia. Alabama, and Kentucky

Sarah Hall, a 6-2 center, is expected to push sophomore Linda-Ann McGowan for starting duty at center next year An Academic All-America, Hall carried a 3.9 grade point average at Manatee High School in Bradenton. An all-area first teamer in volleyball and basketball, she averaged 16 points and 12 rebounds in addition to setting a new school record for blocked shots with 40. She was listed among the top 16 female prep seniors in state

Valerie Garrett, 5.9, shooting guard from Grand Ridge, completes the first day signees. A very academically oriented athlete, Garrett possesses great quickness. She was the leading scorer in Jackson County throughout her high school career. Garrett, who was awarded the Margaret Brown Trophy for scoring 1,000 career points, finished her high school career with 1,829. Not heavily recruited, she adds excellent rebounding abilities to go along with her scoring capabilities.

We wanted to improve our team quickness and heighth and I think we will accomplish those goals," FSU head coach Jan Dykehouse said. "I'm very pleased that I could sign one player for each of the five positions. I think this will give us the depth we need."

Florida State women's basketball got another lift today when Brenda Cliette, who did not play basketball this year in order to concentrate on track, announced that she would play basketball next year. Cliette, a 5-8 forward, averaged 13.5 points per game, 9.3 rebounds and had a team leading 42 blocks and 77 steals for the Lady Seminoles during the 1983 season

Dykehouse said she expects to sign up to three more players to complete the FSU roster for the 1985 season

Perez due back in Atlanta today

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic - Atlanta Braves pitcher Pascual Perez, his mother, his wife and his two small children prepared Wednesday to fly to Atlanta, two days after his release from a Dominican jail where he spent three months for cocaine possession

Perez, 26, posted a 15.8 record last year and the righthander was slated to resume a starting role with the Braves But his status is being reviewed by Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, whose office has launched an investigation into the affair

Kuhn has issued suspensions of players involved with drugs, but Rafail Antun, a representative of the Braves accompanying Perez and his family, said the pitcher will protest his innocence at an expected meeting with the commissioner in New York

"We are taking certified copies of the lower court ruling and the appellate court decision, which show that it was never proved that Pascual Perez was a drug trafficker or that Pascual Perez was a consumer of drugs," said Antun, the president of the Dominican Estrellas baseball club

Antun, a friend of Braves general manager John Mullen, said the evidence - the cocaine found on Perez when he was arrested - was never produced in court by the police, and "even though they searched his house and made him disrobe, they could not find any drugs."

"If he had been a drug adict he wouldn't have been able to stand three months in jail," Antun said "I've known Pascual for many years and he is not a drug user - I can assure you of that '

Perez was arrested Jan 9 with a friend as they emerged from a tavern in the provincial town of Santiago, about 100 miles north of Santo Domingo. Federal narcotics agents said they found half a gram of cocaine in his wallet

At a trial last month, a criminal court judge found him guilts of simple possession rather than drug trafficking. which was the original charge. If found guilty of the trafficking charge he could have been sent to prison for two to five years and fined up to $5,000.

Instead, the judge fined him 1,000 Dominican pesos, the equivalent of $333. But prosecutors appealed, and an appellate court last week upheld the lower court's verdict Perez was released Monday after the prosecutors decided not to appeal to the Dominican Supreme Court

Perez, who called his time in jail "a black experience," promised he would be "an example for the youth of our country, the youth of the world '

Referring to Perez' physical condition, Antun said, "He is in excellent shape. He could pitch tomorrow. As soon as he gets the commissioner's authorization, he is ready to

While in prison, Perez, dressed in his Braves uniform was allowed to work out in the prison yard and later, accompanied by an armed guard, at the Cibao Stadium in Santiago

Williams signs 2 recruits

SPECIAL TO THE HEAMER AT

Florida State head basketball coach Joe Williams announced Wednesday the signing of 6-6 forward Jerome Eitchett and 6-0 point guard Thomas Mabry to national letters of intent

Fitchett, who played for Taylor County High School, averaged 20.6 pc nts and 15.2 rebounds during his senior season and had been an All Big Bend selection for the last

"I think he'll end up about 6 8 when he's done growing," said Taylor County coach Lawrence Holt of the just turned 17 year "He can play inside or outside and handles the ball well for a guy his tize. He's an unsellish player

Fitchett was recruited by NCAA champion Georgetown in addition til South Horida, Stetson, Tulane, and Southwest Louisiana A good student, he plans to major in engineering at FSU

"Jerome jumps well, he's quick and he just has a natural basketball saves." added Williams

Mahry hails from Merced Junior College in California, the same school that sent guard Dean Shaffer to the Seminoles a year ago. Merced was 24-8 with Mabry at point guard this season and the Rocky Mount, N ( native averaged 17 points and seven assists while shooting 53 percent from the

"He can get the ball up and down the floor against any kind of pressure. Williams said. "He's quick and plays good defense. But his primary asset is getting the ball up the floor and getting the offense starled

Today's signings brings the number of Seminole recruits in the fold to five. In November, Horida State signed high schoolers Iony Carter, a 6-4 guard from Pensacola, 6 10 center Terry Martin of Milton and 6-1 guard Jeff Davis of Godby High School in Tallahassee

Carter finished his senior year with all city honors while averaging 17.9 points for the seventh-ranked 3A team in the state. Martin_ considered a sleeper who will develop as he gets experience, averaged 9 1 points and " 5 rebounds

Davis was an All-Big Bend choice and averaged 16 points for 1A state runner up

"I think with this group we've got a good bit of potential," said Williams of his recruiting class. They give us the most solid base we have had. We've got ourselves in a position where they can come in and learn the system because most of our starters return It will give them (the recruits) a chance to mature and then

Yankee yearbook cover recalled

PACIFIC NEWS NEWS DE

The first edition of the Yankees official magazine this year had to be recalled to the factors. The reason. The cover picture showed outfielder Dave Winfield posing in a tropical scene with some seagulls in the background Team owner George Steinbrenner thought that might bring back painful memories of last summer, when

Winfield was hauled into a Toronto court on charges of fatally bearing a seaguil between innings of a game with the Blue Javs. The charges were dropped, but so was the Winfield picture Covers were removed from 15,000 copies of the magazine and replaced by shots of manager Yogi Berra and pitcher Ron Guidry

FSU relay team running well

FSU TRACK

Putting a nationally ranked 1,600 meter relay team together is nothing new for Florida State University men's track coach Dick Roberts

The Seminoles, however, haven't had a nationally ranked team since 1982. So, the team's performance in the 1984 indoor and outdoor seasons has been a welcome surprise

The team of Leander Mckenzie, Reggie Ross, Charlie Carr and Vince Bostic have scored win after win, and have placed in the top three consistently since January

Their performance at last weekend's Texas Relays was no exception.

Mckenzie led off as usual and by the time Bostic leaned into the finish, the Noles had placed third with a 3 05 50 ISU's finish had qualified them for the NCAA outdoor championships after all was said and done

McKenzie also placed fourth in the 110meter high hurdles in 13 20 at the meet

"The relay team ran real well," Roberts

Two executions scheduled for May 9

A NETTED PRESS IN THEN A THUNAL

Gov Bob Graham ugned death warrants for Death Row inmates James Adams and James Douglas Hill Thursday, just one week after Arthur Frederick Goode became the third man to die in Florida's electric chair in the past five months

The death warrants, which are valid from noon May 3 until noon May 10, are the 75th and 76th Graham has signed since becoming governor in January 1979 Four executions have been carried out

Florida State Prison Superintendent Richard Dugger scheduled the executions for 7 a.m. May 9

The warrant is the first for Hill, 25, who was convicted of the June 25, 1980, rape and murder of 12 year old Rosa Lee Parker in Hillsborough County Attorneys say his execution will likely be blocked by the courts

The warrant is the second for Adams, however

Adams, 47, who beat former St. Lucie County chief deputy Edgar Brown to death with a fire poker at his home on Nov 12, 1973, was also scheduled to die in February 1980 but his execution was blocked by a U.S. District Court

Since then, his appeal has been denied by the district court and the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in

James Douglas Hill

Atlanta The U.S. Supreme Court denied review two months ago.

Like Adams, John Spenkelink, who was executed in May 1979, and the three most recent victims were all on their second death warrants when they were executed.

Should Adams be executed, he would be the first black man to die in Florida's electric chair since the reinstatement of the death penalty. The federal courts have already rejected his claims of racial discrimination, however a veteran of 1964 Freedom Summer when * blacks in Missassipi were registered to vote - wants the summer of 1984 to go down in history as the year 1 million voters were registered in America.

You might say Hulbert James has a dream

And James believe he can register all those new voters between June 1 and August 11 - with the help of 5,000 college students recruited to help him reach unregistered voters in welfare and unemployment offices and on federal cheese and milk give away lines

That's where you'll find unregistered voters, James told social work students at Florida State University and Florida A&M University Thursday, James, the director of Human SERVE - or Human Service Employees Registration and Voter Education - said unregistered voters today are still the poor, blacks, women and other minorities

"I don't believe the reason why you have 60 million unregistered voters is apathy," James said "There are still barriers. Who in unregistered? 10 million blacks are not registered "

According to James, there are 900,000 unregistered blacks in New York alone - and that means only 46 percent of the blacks eligible to vote in New York are registered, while 80 percent of the blacks eligible to vote in Mississippi are registered

"In 1984, I like to say that the unregistered blacks are upSouth, not down South," said James

James believes that individual voters can make a difference, not only in city and county elections but in national elections.

"If 182,000 people - out of 85 million - had voted for Carter in 1980 and not for Reagan, then Carter would still be president todas," James said. "Reagan won Tennessee by 1,000 votes, and got all the electoral votes for the state as

"What it comes down to, brothers and sisters, is very small numbers," James said

He also told the students that their help in the voter registration drive was in their healthy self-interest, if they expected to get a job after graduation

"I don't have to tell a classroom full of social work students that social programs are being gutted," James said. "They're being gutted because there's no constituency for social programs

James asked the students to contribute one hour a week over the 10-week drive to help register voters in 20 cities across the United States Human SERVE will be concentrating on large, urban areas - some of the cities targeted in Florida and Jacksonville, Orlando, Tampa, Miami and Ft. Lauderdale. A core of 88 students paid $100. a week will work full-time on the 10-week campaign with other student volunteers.

'I made the decision I didn't want to live in a society where people could talk about a 'permanent underclass.' -Hulbert James

James told the students he himself had decided to become active in civil and welfare rights groups in college, when he heard a professor refer to the "permanent underclass" in America

"I made the decision I didn't want to live in a society where people could talk about a 'permanent underclass', said James. "I cannot accept seven percent unemployment or eight million people our of work, and we can probably double the official unemployment figure to include all those people who are discouraged from even looking for a job - as normal."

James promised the students their summer work would be a learning experience

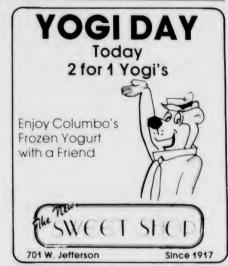

"It will take you out of the classoom," James said. "It vou're gonna learn about poverty, learn about it in a welfare office Black or white, young or old - the experience you'll have this summer will be worth fifteen classes in sociology or social work."

Bi-partisanship

At long last, President Reagan has bipartisan agreement on his foreign policy. Now members of both parties in Congress are united in opposition to the manner in which the president is conducting the nation's affairs in Central America.

The final straw was the report last week that the CIA is directly supervising the mining of Nicaraguan harbors. If those reports are true—the CIA will neither confirm nor deny them for the record—the agency is breaking both U.S. and international law. Under the posit Watergate laws designed to prevent intelligence abuses, the agency is required to keep key members of Congress informed of its doings. Officials at the White House and at the CIA say privately that they have done so, but Sen. Barry Goldwatet, chairman of the Senate linelligence Continutee, insists that the first time he leatned of the agency's direct insolvement in the mining was when he read about it in the newspapers.

In fact, there're some questions as to whether even the president knew about the CTA's activities. This is disturbing stuff, as Sen Robert Byrd of West Virginia has pointed out. "If he didn't know, it scare me. If he did know it scares me. Who's in charge if he didn't know." If he did know, why did he enter into an act that is in violation of the international law?"

Why, indeed The administration, of course, argues that the mining and other arrempts to subvert the Sandinista government—which is just as legitimate as our own was 200 years ago—are justified under the doctrine of collective self-defense. They say the supply of arms to the contras lighting the Sandinistas are intended to interdict any arms shipments between Managua and El Salvador; that the mines are there to plug air arms flow from Havana. Nicaragua, Cuba, and ultimately the Soviet Union are trying to overthrow the government of El Salvador, the argument goes, so Washington is justified in helping its ally in these ways.

That's the argument for the record. Off the record, a government source told the press the mining is intended to send a message not to the Krentlin, but to Lloyds of London. The mines are intended to choke Nicaragua's foreign trade by frightening ships out of its harbors. Source of those ships belong to our allies. Some of those ships belong to Americans.

There's more. The Nicaraguans, at the receiving end of the ClA's multi-million dollar campaign of terror had been preparing to take their case to the World Court this week when the United States amounced that it would not accept the court's jurisdiction. Apparently, the administration did not want to give the Nicaraguans a "propaganda" forum to embarrass the U.S.

Odd notion coming from a government which just a few years ago hauled frair into the same court to complain about the "terrorist" setzure of the U.S embassy in Teheran. President Carter, unlike his successor, believes in the rule of law. He knew that, even though the Ayotollah Khomerni was unlikely to be much swayed by a group of jurists in the Hague, it was unportant for the United States to at least give lip service to the concept of international law, if only for public relations reasons. Some people might call that propaganda. Apparently, the state department does, now that the United States is the aggressor.

Why fight a propaganda war you know you can't win?

Send food, not guns, to poor nations

BY ELAINE ROBERTS

The Reagan Administration's increasing militarization of foreign and is a major factor contributing to the dangerous instability in the world at the present time. It reflects a willingness to bargain and make political deals on the backs of the people people. This militarization is based on the premise that we can win security by propping up-military dictatorships and providing them with atms to use against their critizens. This premise ignores the poverty and hunger that leads to instability in poor countries. These troubled countries often become arenas for super power struggles.

President Reagan and his advisors have shown an appalling disregard for the lives of millions of Africans suffering due to the present famine in sub-Saharan countries, as well as a disregard for the process of governing that has been a building block in our democracy. These facts were demonstrated recently by the administration's shoddy aneuvering to pass its Central American military aid package. Reagan used the bill that would grant emergency food assistance to Africa as a vehicle to grant extra military aid to Central America. The bill to give relief to starving Africans was in the Senate Appropriations Committee It was being given rapid action because of the urgency of the situation in Africa. The administration then proposed extra military aid to the government of El Salvador as an amendment to the emergency famine relief bill for Africa. Thus, the president and himnen effectively stalled action on the famine relief efforts, which would have had quick Senate approval. They used a sleazy method to get their controversial Salvadoran aid by trying to bypass the regular committee process. The fact that the Senate Appropriations Committee, of which Florida Sen. Lawton Chiles is a member, allowed this relief bill to be stalled in this way makes one wonder if they think that it is acceptable for people to starve to death while they make their deals.

A bill presently being considered in the House would seek to halt this trend toward militarization of our foreign aid policy. It is called the Human Needs & World Security Bill (H.R. 4440).

This bill calls for a cap on foreign "security aid" for fiscal year '85, and for additional funds to selected development aid efforts and emergency food aid under Public Law 480 Overall, this bili would save several hundred million dollars in the 1985 budget as it would but increases in military and other security aid to foreign countries for 1985. The additional funding proposed in HR 4440 is for Linkel, 550 million, U.S. Agency for International Development health projects, $175 million, Peace Corpy, $20 million, International Fund for Agricultural Development, $90 million, a special small projects," fund within the Inter-American Development Bank, $10 million, and $50 million for use in food emergencies under Title II of Public Law 480.

The above life giving activities focus on basic health, water and food production and primary education programs. They provide direct aid to enable poor people to become self-sufficer. The Human Needs & World Security bill provides expansion of proven aid programs. HR 4440 makes no cut in current military aid, and would allow aid to be shifted from one country to another if Congress and the administration feel there is a need.

Money spent on arms cannot be spent on people In developing countries, there is one soldier for every 250 people—and one doctor for every 3,700. Arms often cause and perpetuate suffering and poverty. Increases in U.S. aid spending for the past four years have been almost entirely for weapons and other "security assistance" rather than for health, education and agriculture. This increase-cuts back development among poor countries. We definitely need to re-focus our aid programs where they will truly "aid" people.

Rep. Don Fuqua's constituents in the Second District should urge him to co-sponsor this important piece of legislation. Certain provisions of this bill are currently slated for action in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House and Senate Appropriations Committee. Sen. Paula Hawkins is on the Foreign Relations Committee and Sen. Chiles is on the Senate Appropriations Committee. They also need to be urged to support proposals from the Human Needs & World Security

This bill goes a long way toward halting our present destructive foreign aid policies. I hope we can make our representatives in Washington realize its significance.

Carelessness marks U.S. Asian policy

BY WILLIAM O. BEEMAN PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE

Nothing could be more straightforward. "The cornerstone of our East Asian defense policy is our defense partnership with Japan, based on the Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security." So reads Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's report to the Congress on the fiscal year 1983 defense budget.

The East Asian defense commitment now occupies third place in U.S. military priorities, with estimated spending of $47 billion in 1985—roughly 15 percent of the total defense budget.

Yet this policy may prove troublesome in the long run, since depending on Japan for U.S. defense in the region is bound to lead to disappointments in the future. This is so because

- Japan is not likely to bring its defense spending to a level which will satisfy Washington
- Recent election setbacks for the ruling Liberal Democratic Party mean that party will be less able to implement policy automatically at the national level—especially such a controversial policy as reversing Japan's defense posture
- An increased Japanese military presence in the region is sure to cause considerable uneasiness among our other regional allies

Current U.S. policy in Fast Asia is in some ways a holdover from previous administrations. Japan is now the only non-European power which. Washington expects to serve as a major U.S. partner in regional defense activities.

During the Nixon and Carter cras, several such relationships were envisioned in other areas—most notably with Iran in the Persian Gulf Now Washington has determined that, with few exceptions, the United States must go it alone in defending the world from communist penetration. Japanis the largest exception

Former Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki's 1981 declaration that Japan's defense policy included its territory, airspace and sea lanes out to 1,000 nautical miles was greeted with great joy in Washington.

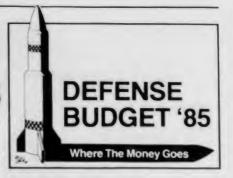

This response is no surprise. The statement commits Japan to undertake primary defense of the bulk of the East Asian coast from Kamchatka in the north to Hong Kong in the south. It also guarantees massive increases in defense purchases from the United States, and assures a strong U.S. physical presence in Japan for the indefinite future.

The downing of the Korean airliner last year illustrates the growing importance of the northern Pacific as a major staging area for new Soviet missles and naval forces Japan's strong presence there, in the eyes of the Defense Department, will help contain Soviet activities which might threaten Alaskan oil, Japanese shipping or even, conceivably, the West Coast of the United States.

The problem with all this is that since 1981 there have been important political and economic changes in Japan which may preclude the fulfillment of Suzuki's stated goals.

When current Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone first took office, it seemed he would have no difficulty beefing up Japanese defense commitments. Publicly identified as a hawk, Nakasone enjered his job committed to altering the Japanese "peace constitution" in which the nation pledged to "forever renounce war."

In his early days in office, he succeeded in getting important legislation through the Japanese Parliament which

fifth in a series

allows the transfer of militars related technologs with the United States. He also succeeded in getting the Liberal Democratic Parts (LDP) to consider ressuing Japan's polics of restricting weapons exports—an essential part of any rearmament polics.

It looked like Nakasone also would be able to chip away at the final barrier to full rearmament—the informal selflimitation on military spending to 1 percent of gross national product Nakasone had called for an increase to 3 percent, which would make Japan the world's fourth largest defense spender after the United States, the Soviet Union and China—a formidable force indeed.

However, Nakasone has suffered severe political reversals since taking office, partly because he has not been able to shake loose of the man who essentially put him there. Kakuer Tanaka, who is appealing a bribery conviction, was re-elected to Parliament last year with members of his faction of the LDP by the largest majority ever recorded in Japan's history.

However, Tanaka's victory was a defeat for Nakasone. The rest of the LDP did so badly they lost their parliamentary majority—a loss attributed to voter dissatisfaction with LDP members who seemed to be under Tanaka's thumb. Nakasone since has vowed publicly to rid the LDP of Tanaka's influence, but no one believes him.

Moreover, the party which gained the most, the Buddhist based Kemeito (Clean Government) Party, has been a prime force in the move to maintain current defense levels. As a result, Nakasone has been unable to deliver on his promise of increased military spending.

An even more serious difficulty-facing U.S. defense polics in Fast Asia is that relying on Japan serves to alarm and alienate every other ally in the region. Suzuki's 1,000 mile policy brought protests from every Asian capitat—even from Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines.

The United States seems to have forgotten the emotional sears left by World War II. These still are so deep that, in 1981, plans to revise Japanese schoolbooks to reflect a less negative Japanese role in events such as the invasion of Manchuria touched off riots in Korea and Hong Kong.

And there is the particular problem of Korea—occupied for 15 years by Japan. Every increase in Japanese military strength touches off a reaction of equal strength in Korea Although American relations with Seoul remain strong, continued support of an increased Japanese military posture could create severe political strains.

But the greatest danger in the region lies in the Philippines Few issues raise national emotions there as high as the Japanese World War II occupation and atrocities Opposition forces could dislodge any pro-Western leader by arguing that the United States is backing a renewal of Japanese hegemony in the region—especially if Japan were to take on a sizable military presence in or near Philippine waters. Marcos has reason to be concerned

In general, then, the United States is embarked on a careless policy, one which assumes that political conditions are stable from year to year, and that other nations in the region do not matter. The policy may serve to contain the Soviet Union in East Asia—its prime goal. But it may also serve to spark other political discord which could prove destructive to U.S. defense policy in the long run.

You can help bring AMTRAK service to the Florida Panhandle this year as a Mobile-Jacksonville route. Starting April 29, AMTRAK service will be restored from New Orleans as far as Mobile jointly funded by Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama to serve the World's Fair in New Orleans.

Tom Gulstafson, chair of the Florida House Transportation Committee, has agreed to budget approximately $1 million the service will initially cost if only legislators from North Florida ask for it. The Florida Panhandle has been without passenger service for about 15 years and restoring passenger trains would have 2 major benefits: 1) allow people in the Panhandle to travel in North Florida and to the rest of Florida and the nation, and 2) bring people outside of Florida into the Panhandle and the rest of the state where they can spend their money to boost our economy.

The train service will do well, especially when accompanied by good scheduling and sufficient advertising. I trust you will want to see this service restored that will benefit North Florida and the entire state.

Write call/meet your legislators and ask them to actively back the necessary monies to restore train service between Mobile-Jacksonville. Now that our three neighbor states have brought the train to our border, it is up to Florida to pick up the ball.

Bi-partisanship

At long last, President Reagan has bipartisan agreement on his foreign policy. Now members of both parties in Congress are united in opposition to the manner in which the president is conducting the nation's affairs in Central America.

The final straw was the report last week that the CIA is directly supervising the mining of Nicaraguan harbors. If those reports are true—the CIA will neither confirm nor deny them for the record—the agency is breaking both U.S. and international law. Under the post-Watergare laws designed to prevent intelligence abuses, the agency is required to keep key members of Congress informed of its doings Officials as the White House and at the CIA say privately that they have done so, but Sen Barry Goldwater, chaitman of the Senate Intelligence Commuttee, insists that the first time he learned of the agency's direct involvement in the mining was when he read about it in this newspapers.

In fact, there re some questions as to whether even the president knew about the CIA's activities. This is disturbing stuff, as Sen Robert Byrd of West Virginia has pointed out: "If he didn't know, it scare me. If he did know it scares me. Who's in charge if he didn't know." If he did know, why did he enter into an act that is in violation of the international law?"

Why, indeed. The administration, of course, argues that the mining and other attempts to subvert the Sandinista government—which is just as legitimate as our own was 200 years ago—are justified under the doctrine of collective sell defense. They say the supply of arms to the contrus fighting the Sandinistas are intended to interdict any arms shipments between Managua and El Salvador, that the mines are there to plug an arms flow from Havana. Nicaragua, Cuba, and ultimately the Saviet Lluon are trying to overthrow the government of El Salvador, the argument goes, so Washington is justified in helping its ally in these wasy.

That's the argument for the record. Off the record, a government source told the press the mining is intended to send a message not to the Kremlin, but to Lloyds of London. The mines are intended to choke Nicaragia's foreign trade by frightening ships out of its harbors. Some of those ships belong to our allies. Some of those ships belong to Americans.

There's more. The Nicaraguans, at the receiving end of the CIA's multi-million-dollar campaign of terror had been preparing to take their case to the World Court this week when the United States announced that it would not accept the court's jurisdiction. Apparently, the administration did not want to give the Nicaraguans a "propaganda" forum to embarrass the U.S.

Smith said the teenager who was stabbed had been kidhapped near Gary, Ind., and was brought into New York State.

Gleason described Wilder as a white male with blue eyes and blond hair. He was believed to be about 6 feet tall, weigh 125 to 180 pounds and have a 5 inch sear on his right ankle.

Sheriffs said they believed Wilder was involved in the attempted murder of the girl. An investigation was continuing

Smith confirmed that Wilder reportedly had another woman in the car, who authorities believed may be one of the women he has allegedly abducted. He said the FBI may have possible lead on her identity and were continuing to investigate.

The FBI was also checking area motels in an effort to find out where he might have been staying

Smith said the last report of Wilder was April 6th in New Mexico.

Committee would give voters option on district plans

LATTIDPRINCINITRALIUNAL

Voters should be able to decide whether their county commissioners run in individual districts or are elected countywide, the House ethics and elections committee decided Phursday

Committee members unanimously approved a measure (HTR 452) that would place on next November's ballot a proposed state constitutional amendment providing a local option for single member districts in counts commission elections.

Another measure passed by the committee would allow single member districts in school board elections, also by local option

The bill affecting county commissions, sponsored by Rep. Alzo Reddick, D.Orlando, is in answer to lawsuits charging discrimination against blacks in counties where commissioners are elected countywide. The lawsuits charge the practice dilutes the black vote.

Florida's constitution prohibits single member districts for county commissions, requiring at-large elections. But in an I scambia County voting rights suit, a federal judge ruled that provision was unconstitutional.

If the amendment is passed by voters statewide, counts commissioners would have the option of local referendums on the districting question

The county commission could vote to place a singlemember district question on the ballot, or the question could be placed on the ballot by a petition signed by 10 percent of a county's electorate.

Counties which are allowed to determine their own government structure under home rule are not affected by the bill. A second measure (HB 451) would make the constitutional amendment a law if it is passed by the voters.

Rep. John Lewis, D-Jacksonville, tried to attach an amendment to the second bill that would also allow counties to make the commission elections non-partisan

Reddick said the amendment would "unduly expand" his bill,

"You're up there at the podium saying we want to give blacks the right to vote — that's the point of your bill." Lewis told Reddick." You do not feel the Republicans and independents should not have the right to vote. And you're using subterfuge by saying it unduly expands the bill."

The committee defeated the amendment 6-12

Rep. Mary Figg. D-Lutz, said single-member districts would make it even more difficult for county commissions to decide where to put waste facilities, prisons, hospitals and other controversial public facilities. But she voted for the bills anyway.

The bill allowing single-member districts in school board elections (HB 163), sponsored by Reps. Dexier Lehtinen, D-Perrine, passed the committee 12-0

In other action Thursday, the committee

 Approved by a 16-2 vote a bill allowing counties to hold non-partisan elections for school boards. The measure (HB 157) was sponsored by Lehtinen and Everett Kelly, D. Astatula.

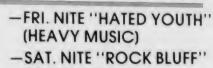

•Approved a measure (HiB 30) giving local government boards the power to suspend or remove members who are accused of crimes. Currently, city and county commissioners who are accused of crimes can be suspended by the governor and, if convicted, can be removed by the governor.

The bill also authorizes the governor to suspend officials for "malfeasance, misfeasance, neglect of duty, drunkenness, incompetence or permanent inability to perform his official duties."

STATE

TALLAHASSEE — A House committee approved legislation Thursday which would make bartenders and other dispensers of alcoholic drinks liable for damages if they "knowingly" serve to intoxicated patrons or alcoholics.

The Judiciary Committee passed the bill (CS-HB 189) by a 10-8 margin after impassioned testimony from two people who have lost relatives in accidents involving drunken drivers

Rep. John Cosgrove, D-Coral Gables, expressed reservations about the bill, asying the law makers might be "treating a whole new field of law for hundreds of thousands of lawyers to file suits whenever somebody had had too much to drink."

The bill makes all dispensers of alcohol except for "social hosts" hable for injury or damage resulting from the actions of intoxicated persons they served. It also prohibits serving alcohol to minors and people "habitually addicted" to alcohol.

Students moving out from dorms into apartments, townhouses

BY MARTHA GEILS

Dormitory life—as much a part of the college tradition as English 101, right? Well, maybe not for everyone since only about one-fifth of all Florida State University students live

And where are the other 14,000 students living? According to Bonnie Glisson of University Housing, a substantial number tabout 2,700 opt for other university related housing. This includes fraternities, scrovities, icholarship houses, Alumni Village, Rodgers Hall, and the FSU trailer park.

FSU trailer park.

Glisson says that while there is no problem filling the residence halls, "we can now meet the demand for university housing. In the late '70s and early '80s, me turned a lot of students away." Glisson attributes at least part of the decrease in demand for university dormitories to an increase in numbers of non-traditional students.

Non-traditional students, older, married, or handicapped students, for example, do make up a relatively large portion of the student body. In 1982, for instance, the average age for melecuradinate, was 22 suppossible a large proposition.

for undergraduates was 22, suggesting a large proportion of older students. While most of the dormitory residents of older students. Wante most of the normatory resonan-are traditional, lower division undergraduates, non-traditional students and many juniors and seniors are taking advantage of other housing options. In fact, about 15,000 students live in housing unrelated to

In fact, about 15,000 students five in bouning unrelated to the university. This means private dormitories, apartments, houses, condominiums, trailers. Usually, when talking about students, it means anything inexpensive. Several factors indicate that apartments are the favorita, among dwelling places. A population census conducted by the Tallahasvee Leon County Planning Department shows that in 1970, the number of people between the ages of 18 and 24 years of age living in multi-family units tapartments, duplexes, triplexes, quadriplexes) within about 2,600-mile radius of FSU was 3,197. In 1980, that number had doubled to 6,363.

"Students want to get away from campus, have their awa place," vays Julie Robbins, a junior at FSU. "You can live chemper in an apartment than you can in a dorm," says Mark Holcombe, "Plus, you get to live with dorm," says Mark Holcombe, "Plus, you get to live with people you want to live with and you've got a swimming pool, tennis courts, all that stuff right there.

Ellen Stahls, associant manager of Sussish Oaks, a 134-unit complex on High Royal, was that in two years stedent restate have increased from 40 perfects to about 50 percent, Mary Ellen Jacobses, manager of Case Cordoba, clies the same trend in her complexed.

Though a larger proposition of studenty are renting apartments, realters have found it more difficult in recent years to fill their apartment complexes. Regency, Mettiler, Collinis, and Marking evalues or restained to the students.

markel-increminally competitive.

Larry Hindley of Meridon Realty Co., vays, "I still think renting is preferable to dindexts, but at the sained time thery is a softmest in the student market." Hindley attributes the decrease in student rentals to a slight decline in the student population (21,547 in 1983) compared with 22, 93 in peak year-1981) and to overbuilding in the late "70s and early '80s.

Debbie Remaker of Mottice agrees, "Overait, we're 95 percent full, but we're not promised Juli occupancy. Three or four years ago there was not as much competition and we were more easily booked."

Competition is tougher now as reflected by the number of new complexes being built in the FNU area. Of any sector of Fallahassee, the largest development of modificating units has been in the FNU area. Between January 1980 and June 1983, 320 multi-family units were permitted in this area.

This far exceeds the second largest development during this period which was in the Governors Square area with 250 its permitted.

Another housing option that is becoming increasingly opular with students is purchasing townhouses and ondominiums. Sales figures broken down into cographical sectors are not available, but overall sales of imbouses have increased dramatically in Tallahassee over past several years.

Before 1981, sales were so slight that in the Tallahassec-lectu County Planning Department Cemons townbouses and apartments were lumped together. Sales began to increase between January and May 1982, when 30 princhouses were sold. In January through May 1963, that figure jumped to 307.

Ingre jumped to 307.

Jerry Samuells of Key Realty deals in both apartment restals and in sales of townhouses. With close to 1,000 properties in Tallahassee, he has noticed the trend toward purchasing townhouses and expects it to continue. "More and more parents are buying places for their kids to live, mostly as tax shelters," Samuells savs.

Atknowly townhouses do not usually come with all the "vertras" of apartments—swimming pools, xaunus, weight rooms—the purchaser does have something to sell when it is all over. According to the Tallahassee-Leon County Planning Department outlook, the construction of townhouses is expected to continue over the next several sears. Especially for families, with several children in college, purchasing a townhouse may become an increasingly popular option.

So the trend in student housing preferences seems to be away from campus. Students are branching out from traditional dormitors life and are finding deals in the private housing market.

An old craft going strong

MARK HINSON

Louis Comfort Tiffans, around the first part of the 20th Century, helped transform the (mastly) Luropean craft of stained glass into an American artform. A very beautiful and Jugrative artform. Stained glass windows, lamps and snuff boxes were very hot tiems with the Victorian era American mindset. Stained glass spread from church windows to front porch doorways and picture windows.

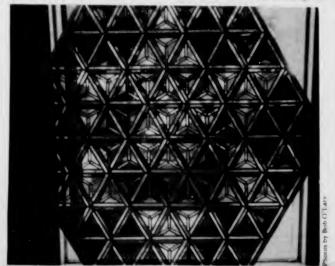

However, intricate and elaborate stained glass artworks fell from grace tessept, of course, in the churches) sometime during the 20s. American architectural thought shifted from the busy Georgian and Victorian styles towards the Frank Lloyd Wright, Philip Johnson and Bauhaus schools of streamlining. On the whole, stained glass did not congeal with "modern architecture" (Whew, so much for a cram course in American architecture.)

When Lonnic Willis, a stained glass artist and owner of Gulfstream Windows Tallahassee, was doing restoration work on Montuello's gorgeous opera house he found that the stained glass windows had been painted over in "drab" colors by the former occupants (mainly businessmen and merchants). "Almost as if they were trying to ignore it (the windows)," Willis noted.

Stained glass began its resurgence out on the West coast during the late 605—mainly in beach and vacation houses. It was in California that Willis, a graduate of INL, art school saw the frend and began his research and study on the artform. Hy artschool training and background as a draftsman proved beneficial. "It is an architectural medium." Willis noted, "a lot of people get into it without much experience."

Willis does several "ready to install" pieces as well as commissioned works by private residents. Then there's also the restoration work glass etching, and he helps teach the craft at Florida Stained Glass. As he talks the phone keep ringing, more business.

Perdido Bay aims to draw tourists

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

PERDIDO KEY—A $26.5 million development for Perdido Key including two 11-story condominiums, a shopping center and hotel, is aimed at drawing tourists away from resort areas in other states, said Dick Lacour, managing partner of Perdido Bay Resort.

Construction on the project is expected to be underway by June, with completion by early summer in 1985, Lacour said

First to be built will be one of the twin waterfront towers to contain 93 units. The $6,000-square foot shopping center will begin in August or September, he said.

Work on the second tower will depend on how fast units in the first tower sell, said I acour, who added that he does not believe there will be any problems with selling the units

A market study of condominium sales at the Kes shows absorption of new condominiums proceeding faster than anyone expected, he said Buvers are coming from all areas of the country who would normally invest in other resort areas, he said. That should mean profits for the developers of the new Perdido Sun project.

"Our study indicates absorption of $25 to $50 units last year and we're predicting a rate of $600 this year." he said. Perdido Bay Resort's consultants "did not perceive the area expanding as fast as it has as a destination market from the west, and they almost neglected the Georgia market."

"Perdido key is a faster drive from Atlanta than Hilton Head, S.C.," said Lacour

The proposed development is a joint venture of the Perdido Bay Partnership, of which Lacour is managing partner, and of Gateway Development Co and Colton Development Co, both of Pittsburgh Gateway is a wholly owned subsidiary of Mellon Stuart Reality Co. Colton is a subsidiary of the Pittsburgh based Dollar Saxings Bank, a $2 billion bank

The Perdido Key development will be a complement to the Perdido Bay Resort, located I. 8 miles away, Lacour said.

philosophizes on the current stained glass revival." "People want to keep them from looking like a crackerbox." And a work of stained glass sometimes adds color as well as personality. Willis works with each of his customers in what he calls an "esolution design processe" until a pattern and style is selected which he can work with and they can live with. Sort of a give and take piece of air.

George Uphone the manager of Woodburchers Stan Glass Studied also saw the stanned glass revival in his home state of California a few year back. He learned the craft and, when he moved to Tallaha seemet Bob and Annie Fulford, the owners of Woodburchers, who employed him.

The bulk of Wondbutchers business comes from the private sector, mainly small faired windows and doorlights (the glass surrounding an entry was). People what to use the sunlight more, use the light to set a mood, "Uphouse explains. "It's especially popular in the Seuth and Sunbelt."

The fover of Woodburchers is decorated with several samplings of their work, everything from finels crafted jewelrs boxes to glass etchings to large three-part screens. In one corner is a fabulous Tiffany replica diagonfly lamp created by Bryony Brett.

Also in the foyer is a display of the works they did for Blessed Sacrament Catholic Church. The work is fascinating and excellent.

Uphouse demonstrates a quick lesson in preparing a stained glass piece. First a cartoon (or pattern) of the proposed work is laved flat with a map of each piece of glass to be fitted. The glass is selected from three different types. Antique which is more transparent, the darker Cathedral glass or the opalescent glass which is colorful and opaque.

Slowly each piece is shaped into its dictated geometric pattern, fitted and scaled with lead or a copper foil. It looks simple from a novice's point of view, the headaches pleasantly concealed.

Uphouse and Woodbutchers also use the "evolution design process" with their customers, taking into account the architecture and design of a house, dwelling or church (for the Blessed Sacrament commission they also desigend accompanying furniture, altars and woodworks)

A gulf Stream Windows window

Their selection of glass (which is extensive) is ordered everywhere from California to Germany. Some sheets are hand-blown, rolled and cut while others are processed by machine.

Classes in the craft are offered by Woodbutchers, which Uphouse helps teach. There's a beginners class and an upcoming advanced course which studies architecture and design

Of course, the price tag for a work of stained glass is, well, not cheap. Uphouse explains that a prospective client usually has made his mind up about a design and knows that the work will be rather expensive. They are paying for hand craftmanship.

As Willis explained, "(We're) working with the same process they used a hundred years ago, except for a few improvements with the tools of the trade. It's a craft."

A Beautiful Obsession—or Gimme Shelter

BY KATI KAIRIES

From cave to skyscraper, humankind has set itself apart from other animals by the urge to build. What began as a need to provide shelter from the elements has become a way of expressing individuality and creativity. It could even be salled as art form, complete with its own viscability of adjectives and catalogue of styles.

Building can become an observion, pasticularly when folks get the bright idea to build their own homes. Initially, the idea of doing it all yourself is intoxicating, but, as one local do it yourselfer attests, it can become a milistone around the necks of all involved.

Mike and Cathy Alfano began building their home in the woods five years ago. Mike, who is an architecture professor at Florida A&M University, designed the house himself and with a liftle help from friends and relatives, he and Cathy and twin daughters. Lea and Cara have completed about 95 percent of the work on the house.

It hasn't always been an easy five years

"We've had to rethink our design a bit, and we've created some new situations and made some initiales," said Alfano "If I know then what I know now. I wouldn't be such a purint about doing exerything ourselves. I wouldn't feel that I had to nail every nail myself."

According to Alfano, the time factor can lause problem for amateur builders

"Being able to a, lept the length of time it takes to actually build a house, can prevent the frustration that can build up if you are too impatient." Alfano said. "It can take a long time to finish a house if you're doing it yourself."

Financial factors and planning errors can also cause

'Being able to have control over our environmental destiny has been a big plus. If you build your own house, you can always change directions if you want to.'

-local do-it-yourselfer problems

"Financing can be a problem for some people because it can put them under time pressure—the bank or loan compan, can set a deadline on the construction," said Alfano. "And the logistics of building sour own home cause a lot of problems for amateurs. There are standard tricks of the trade that amateurs don't know. little things like using string to level stuff, unlead of leveling everything by hand."

"Having friends and relatives who know different trades can realls help out down on time and hassle." Alfano added

The advantages of "constructing your own space" can instrumed be the disadvantages, Alfano claimed Some of the plusses sticlade freedom from financial burdens and having complete artists, control over the finished product.

In our case, not having a mortgage has been great," said. Alfano: "We've owned it ourselves as we've gone along, by completing parts of the building process as we could afford

"We've also been able to achieve the quality of space, materials, and environment that we want," Alfano said "Being able to have control over our environmental destins has been a big plus. If you build your own house, you can always change directions if you want to. It's practically impossible to get a contractor to change the original plan once they get started."

A more intangible benefit of building your own house is enhanced mental health

"Nailing and sawing is very therapeutic," Alfano saidsmashing nails is a great aggression-remover for me. Having to concentrate on what you're doing clears your head and makes that rotten day you've had at the office seem insignificant."

Time, patience, and good planning—these are the ingredients of making a success of going it on your own. But before all you neophyte builders rush out and bus the first beard. Alfano has some Tips for the Unitiated.

"Consult an architect, or someone who has built their own house and can offer you the benefits of their wisdom," advised Alfano. "Have a good framework of ideas to work with, and read as much as you can about all aspects of home building. There is some very helpful literature on everything from pouring a foundation to wiring an entire house to installing your own plumbing.

"Building your own house can be a very fulfilling thing."

Alfano said. "The reason most folks do it in the first place is to avoid the conservative and commonplace. It's like the difference between buying a suit off the rack and buying a custom tailored suit. I recommend it."

Everly Brothers compilation that deserves success

24 Original Classics, The Everly Brothers, Arista Records, 1957-72 1984.

For years, packages of the Everly Brothers' records have been issued and re-issued, here and abroad. Even though it's practically necessary that they be perennially available (just as a reminder that well-crafted music was once made by caring human beings), no Everly Best-Of Collection has provided a decent overview of their career. And while Arista Records' new collection may not be the definitive, exhaustive One to End Them All, it's the first I know of that dares to venture into their later years, the ones scarred by declining popularity, drug and alcohol abuse, brushes with death and desperation

It's ridiculous to call any of the Everly recordings "old " Unlike so many of rock pop's major formal innovators, their sound, so simple, sprightly and everpresent, hasn't ever betrayed its age. Yearning youth rears its lovely head each time these recordings, some a quarter-century old, play "Bye Bye Love", their first single for Cadence Records in 1967, could have been recorded yesterday. If it were, I'd love to see the shock-waves it would send through the industry -"No synthesizers, gee!"

As the Everlys aged, went through the endless hell of touting, lost the delectable thrill of having top 40 records (none, save flukes like "Gone, Gone, Gone" and "Bowling Green," after 1962), it showed in their voices, their attitude toward what they were doing. But the conviction that buoyed their very first record never left them, even to this day

Although their sentiments were seldom ebullient - take 'Bye Bye Love", "I Wonder If I Care As Much". Problems", "When Will I Be Loved", the titles explain themselves - then music always was. Like Fats Domino, they plowed into every tune with the same assured fervor, geared by jaunty rhythm-guitars, beautific harmons, and simple percussive back ups. They were fortunate to have a steady stream of songs from one of the all time great word and-music teams, Felice and Boudleaux Bryant. Although the Everlys wrote material from the start (mostly the B sides on their singles, Don Everly got his statt peddling songs in Nashville), it was the Bryants who molded their music. Their melodies, too country to be pop, too aggressive for country, gave the Everly's identity

The twelve Cadence cuts on this collection, by themselves, are reason for joy. I rom the comic teen-nightmare of "Wake Up Little Susse" ('The movie wasn't so hot it didn't have much of a plot We fell asleep our goose is cooked our reputation is shot') to the onanistic splendor of "All I Have to Do is Dream", the frustralion of "When Will I Be Loved", and the insoliciance of "Till I kissed You", the Cadence Everly sides are among rock's all time finest. Simple yet complex, benign and brooding, fiell of expectation, disconsolation, and pure, unfettered emotion, they can be listened to over and over again without losing their

The musicianship of these records is marvelous without straying attention from the heart of the matter - the tunes 'n' lyrics - like so much modern stuff does (Understandably so, since few modern bricisty have any

Love", "Wake Up Little Susie", and others have been making rock musicians envious for years and keeping them busy devising blatant variations

And then there are those harmomes - so smooth and rich and reassuring, capable of pure pathos ("Take a Message to Mary", "Devoted to You") or dangerous conne glee ("Poor Jenny", about a gul abandoned at a wild party and picked up by police). Two voices singing as one, in full flush of

The Warner Brothers recordings, long criticized by devotees, continued those traditions of craft and caring Although they lost their original producer, Wesley Rose, and had to deal with a mixed bag of styles, some detrimental to them, the Everly's mannersms never waned, even in the face of declining popularity. Then musical ideas matured, ironically, as public favor switched to the assorted British groups they'd stylistically fathered

The selection here includes standards - the miraculously opaque "Cathy's Clown", Carole king's "Crying in the Rain", "So Sad", "Walk Right Back" but goes further into the mid and late '60s

"That's Old Fashioned" (not on this collection) was their last Top Tenhit, 22 years ago. After that, their songs become morose in an adult way. The Cadence records, even at their gloonnest (save the Cole Porter ish "Since You Broke My Heart", flipside of 1960's "Let It Be Me"), were clearly geared towards purely teenage angst. But what is youthful about the first line of 1965's "The Price of Love" ('Wine is sweet, gin is bitter Drink all you want but you won't forget her'l? Or 1961's "Sleepless Nights", with its narrator tormentedly twisting in bed, wondering what his ex-lover is up to? It's easy to see why these later records didn't catch the public's attention, hooked, as they were, on the then upbeat

There's no need for a bare wall

BY MARK MOBILLY

Historians to come may well decide that the great cultural development of the 20th century was the freedom to call anything art. But for the people of today, the pressing concern is what looks good in their homes, and they are more likely to choose tame posters and prints over examples from more during movements. (There are exceptions, of course. "Please, Christo, tell me how I can improve my home." "Madam, I suggest that you wrap your littshand and Percy Jr. here in pink fabric.")

The thriving poster and print market provides many opportunities for those interested in purchasing art at low pieces. Poster art from many different national sources is available from shops such as the Liame Up at Governor's Square. Their prices run from $5.500 for posters without frames.

A local producer of poster art has been the Florida State University Student Government, which has funded posters by student artists for the advertisement of events in the School of Mode.

The new University Symphony poster by Kevin Yates — released this week — in a fine example. Yates has taken the program of the 17 April concert and used the names of the pieces to suggest design ideas. The poster is a series of musical instea on staves that change down the course of the sheet in the mainter of each title. For The Planets, the staves bend to form orbits and for La Mer they get way. The poster is effective because it draws the eye down to the vital information at its bostom. Yate's new poster is a worthy successor to his popular Carmina Buruna poster of last season.

Another source of student work is the Print Lab of the Art Department. Students who work here are often interested in selling their pieces to raise money for forth-oming projects. Those interested should contact facults members Arthur Deshaies or William Walmsles at 643-5708.

Other sources for posters and inexpensive pieces include sidewalk sales, record and book shaps, galleries and the Post Office, which produces some striking posters for the announcement of new usings. One poster that is popular on campuses now is the new St. Pauli Ciril beer ad. The model on the poster is not quite the same as the girl on the bottle. Both have been available recently at Jax Liquios.

Framing a poster is a very easy business. As one framer says, "It's about the simplest thing you can do with your hands." One solutions to hus glass and hold the apparatus together with clips from Bill's rather than a full frame. The more elaborate route begins at a shop like Up Against Your Wall, where they will dry-mount a 20" 30" poster for $2.50, this process protects the piece from wrinkles induced by the local humidity.

They will then sell an aluminum frame for about $25 and glass for about $8 (double for non-glare). Add a $4.50 supply charge and the thing is finished. The experienced can save money by ordering frames through the mail and having glass cut themselves.

Almost anything can improve the look of a bare wall. Those who are truly stock for ideas need only remember that this article is suitable for framing.

PARIS—President Reagan's daughter. Patti Davis, chose springtime in Paris and a French magazine to surprise her parents today and announce her engagement to a Californian yoga teacher.

Unfortunately, the 31-year-old actress was upstaged by her former actress mother, who already announced the engagement at the White House Wednesday

"I prefer to be engaged like this, by surprise, and in Paris," Davis told the weekly magazine FSD (Friday Saturday Sunday). The president and first lady would learn of their daughter's engagement to Paul Grilley in the newspapers, she said

However, the news was already out Wednesday when Nancy Reagan made the announcement

Davis and Grilley. 25, met in Los Angeles two years ago while she was taking yoga lessons, White House aides said

The president and Nancy Reagan were introduced to Grilley during the Christmas holidays, Nancy Reagan's press secretary, Sheila Tate, said, and "they liked him very much." Tate quoted the First Lady as saying, "We're very happy for her."

In the French interview, in which she said she disapproved of her father's running of the United States, but believed he would be reelected. Davis said she had rediscovered "the freedom of kissing without having a bodyguard peeking over your shoulder."

Clutching a blue "smurf" doll in one hand and an engagement ring—the gift of an exclusive Paris jeweller—on the other, Davis speculated on married life.

Beatles, "Eight Days a Week" and all

"Bowling Green", their last Top 40 single, from 1967, is deliriously happy, and included here as an obvious relief from several successive dirges. Its brightness is genuine but atspical, flavored with flutes and perky backup vocals. It's amazing they could pull it off. By this time they had ten years of touring under their belis. Don became hooked on speed and tried to kill himself. Both had mental and physical problems. But they persevered.

The cornerstone of their career tso (ar) is Roots, a concept album cut in 1968. It blended old C&W standards (like Songs Our Daddy Fuughi (3, a 1938 Cadence album), remakes of early tunes, and bits of childhood radio performances. The most remarkable piece on the album, a reworking of "I Wonder If I Care As Much", is included here. Originally the Bisde of "Bye Bye Love", the 1987 version is despairing but not despairing enough. You can't make a sad song really sad 'til you've been through the wringer. The Everlys that wrote and sang the first version hadn't soaked much in (It's incredible that they could write it that early.)

Eleven years later, they can sigh the words out, spirit long gone, and give it levels of insight a song san't supposed to have. The song is about someone questioning, with his one life at stake, the importance of unrequired longing he's nursed far past sanity. The finger snapping gait of the original is abandoned for droning electric guitar, the pace is slowed down to escape the jurisdiction of toe-tapping. They leave out the strongest verse of the original.

My heart can't thrive on misery

My life it has no destiny

When things get more than I can bear

Lask myself do Estill care?

The eager-beavers of 1957 are compelled to toss that in, just to prove they aren't kidding. The frazzled tour-vets of '68 don't even have to finish the song. Does it matter asymore? Where did our youth go? Did we ever know to begin with? The fatigue in their voices asks many questions without bothering to answer them.

In 1973, they called it quits — Phil angrily stalked out of a packed concert, leaving Don to finish the show. They recorded numerous solos (Phil's "Dare to Dream Again", from 1980, is the only one I've been able to track down). Ten years later, they reconciled. A taped concert they gave last fall at Albert Hall was a success on HBO, spawning a fat soundtrack album. Right now they're working on an all-new album, produced by prodigy Dave Edmunds. I hope all three records — this one included — are commercially successful. The Everly Brothers have done more good things than almost anyone I can think of. Their re-emergence certainly couldn't have come at a better time. If they still care, there's hope after all, I suppose.

Guilty pleasures with the smell of Heaven

BY DEBORAH HARTLEY

evon Violet Wood Strawberry and Glycerine Persian Lilac Rosemary Scottish Heather

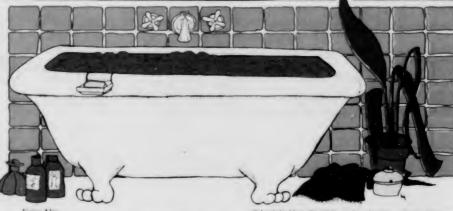

These are all soaps from the bewitching line purveyed by Messrs Crabtree and Evelyn of London, England in Tallahassee, you can guy them from James Surrey, Ltd.—the "scentsational gift emportum"—in Governor's Square Mall

What price such luxury? Between $2.50 and $4.50 the bar. Of course, you can get a perfectly serviceable bar of Dial decedorant soap for 63 cents at Publix. And you will be clean—but that's like saying if you eat at Burger King, you'll

There's a whole world of sybarite things for the bath out there that most Americans—perhaps the most aggressively clean people in the world—ignore. Maybe it's because we heard as children that "cleanliness is next to godliness," and concluded bathing is an unpleasant moral duty, best gotten o er with quickly. Or maybe we can blame T. V. (and we on blame T. V. for almost everything) for giving us kids like Beaver and Opie for role models—"Aw, gee, Paw—do I really have to take a bath?"

And so, we grow up and stock our bathrooms with dismal little shell shaped guest soaps that get dusty because no one ever uses them.

If you've never thought much about soap, beyond remembering to grab a bar of Zest (possibly the most offensive brand on the market, that stuff was not meant to clean human skin) before heading to the check-out line at Winn Dixie, you're in for a big surprise. Mankind, most particularly the English and the Germans, has made soaps, shampoos and body lotions from almost every root, berry, fruit, vegetable and flower that exists. This goes was beyond Mr. Bubble—I have yet to encounter a prune-based soap, but I don't doubt it's out there somewhere in a village in the

Swiss Alpi

Here is a guide to some soaps and sundries, including where you can find them in I allahassee, and how much some of them will set you back

James Surrey, Ltd. This shop is positively dangerous for anyone addicted to the pleasures of the bath. The sheer smell of it could induce orgasm in soap-lovers, coupled with a reckless abundon about blowing two weeks pay in one 15 minute shot. Sachets spill out of baskets on display cases, exquisite razors from Comoy's of London and Italy's Tonal gleam on velvet and on one shelf you can find a dark blue pillow with a potpourir of sleep herbs, "based on a 17th century stillroom recope... soothes and refreshes and encourages natural sleep."

James Surrey, Ltd. carnes all the varieties of Crabtree and Evelyn soap mentioned at the beginning of this article, as well as several others for between $2.50 and $4.50. You might want to try the Sandalwood or Sea Algae soap along with the floral and bethal sorts, or maybe your taste is for something a little more traditional like Brown Windsor. "by the Victorian era, the most popular soap from Sandhurst to Simla."

For $11.50, you can get three bars of CAE's South Sea soaps in such exors: fragrances as plumeria (frangipani), white ginger, maile (from the flowers of the lei plant) and pikake (a type of jasmine). CAE also makes Primrose and Hones and Mallow and Honey cleansing lotton ($9.50) and a Calendula Hair Conditioner (marigold — "a gloral extract from the Bavarian Alps") for $8.95

You can bus Lavender, Vetiver or Violet Tollet Water in old-fashioned blue bottles by Scarborough and Company for $9.50, or a truly wonderful thing—the Original Austlain Backscribber—for $19.50. The Australian Backscribber features issail fibers on a canvas belt—good, clear fun from Down Under.

Specier types might enjoy C&E's Cinnamon soap, or Nutmeg soap from Scottish Fine Soaps, Ltd. in a walnutbrown box for $3.50. You can get a very gifty Scented Heart Soap, in a porcelain holder with 22k gold trim, for $8.95.

Two larger, beautifully packaged soaps: English Butler's soap in a ceramic holder, $18.50 — said to be suitable for washing almost anything, including the most delicate fabrics. And French Cook's Soap and sponge box, $17.50, all tied up in a Gallic blue ribbon.

Then there are the whimsscal Beatrix Potter and Alice-in-Wonderland scap collections — featuring the Mad Hatter, Peter Rabbit and Jemima Puddle-duck, $3.50 each. Or for $6.50, you can buy "Party Bear," a scented scap shaped like a bear (looks for all the world like it's made of chocolate). You can even purchase golf-ball shaped soap, three for $4.95.

Reagan may try end run to win military aid

UNITED PRESSURE EN ATROPAL

WASHINGTON - House leaders Thursday agreed to give President Reagan a third of the 593 million in emergency aid he wants for El Salvador, but sources said Reagan was determined to get more even if he has to take it from the defense budget

Efforts to negotiate a compromise on the issue failed and the White House was considering whether to take money from discretionary funds available to the president

Speaker Thomas O'Neill said the House leaders agreed to give Reagan a third of the aid he Criginally wanted. The comments came as the House prepared to vote on a resolution opposing the U.S. role in mining Nicaraguan ports, an operation that fanned outrage on Capitol Hill-over Reagan's Central American policy

An identical amendment was approved by the Repbulican controlled Senate Tuesday by an overwhelming 84-12 vote - a direct repudiation of Reagan's factics in his crusade to arrest communist subversion in the region

The Democratic-led House was expected to follow suit late Thursday after action on a budget bill.

The harbor mining, conducted as part of a comprehensive effort to disrupt Nicaragua's economy, has been denounced in Congress as 'an act of war and criticized by key U.S. allies. Several lawmakers - most notably GOP Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona - also have complained sharply they were not told of the secret mining operation by the CIA sponsored guerrillas

O'Neill, D Mass, said a House Senate conterence committee might work out differences on a special inones bill containing militars aid for 11 Salvador and funds for the guerrillas in Nicaragua, but the effort ended later in the day with no formal meeting

O'Neill said the House would refuse to go along with the $21 million provided by the Senate for the Nicaraguan

Rep. Clarence Long, D.Md., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, said the administration was firm in its insistence on $62 million for El Salvador and would not accept a lesser amount

"I think the president wants a confrontation with Congress on the idea that we want a collapse of LI Salvador," Long said after a meeting with Langhorne Motley, assistant secretary of state for latin America

Long said House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jamie Witten, D. Miss., preferred to deal with the mones bill after Congress returns from its week long I aster revess, scheduled to begin today

A source in the Senate leadership said the president also had the option of reprogramming, switching funds from other programs to meet El Salvador's needs. That could be done unless objections were raised within 15 days by the House or Senate Appropriations Committees

But the source said the While House was leaning in favor of using the president's emergency authority to draw funds typem the defense budget

Senate Republican leader Howard Baket said he still hacks the aid for the rebels

I continue to support covert aid to the contras trebels)." Baker told reporters. "I think a majority of the Senate supports it.

There is a clear difference between that program and the mining of the harbori. Baker said

Sen robert Byrd, the Seniare Democratic leader, called the mining of Ni araguan harbors an act of territrism and said it the administration insists it is an act fit self-defense it should be willing to take its case to the world court

"It seems obvious that the United States is at least supervising the mining if not executing it," Byrd said.

Liru, we're told that this mining needed to be done because, well, it's harassment (ben it') defense, for self defense Bird said on NBC's Todas program

"But in matters of self defense, we have to report to the United Nations and to the world amitt." Byrd said

"We want the world court when it suits out purposes, Byrd said, adding "Now that we've been caught red handed, we don't warn the court

"It's an act of terrorism," Byrd said-

O'Neil said the administration strongly opposes efforts to further reduce the Salvadoran aid package

Reagan and Secretary of State George Schultz have repeatedly warned that the Salvadoran armed forces are in danger of running out of supplies and equipment to carry on their battle against lettist guerrillas

O'Neill said $32 million — on top of the $65 million Congress voted last year — would carry the Salvadorans through the end of the year, but administration officials insist more aid is needed

Nicaragua: U.S. ship helped lay mines

INTERPRESENTATIONAL

MANAGUA, Nicaragua- A Sandinista navy chief said Thursday the U.S. frigate Gallers, cruising off Nicaragua's coast, is responsible for mining the nation's main port and for rebel raids that killed 15 government troops

A top Sandinista army officer told a news conference in Managua that Nicaraguan troops battling an 8,000-man CIA backed rebel offensive have killed 310 rebels in northern provinces he said were "in a state of war."

Joaquin Cuadra Lacayo, who heads the army, said rebels of the U.S. backed Nicaraguan Democratic Force, or FDN, had 5,500 men fighting inside Nicaragua and another 2,500 in Honduras ready to cross the border

"The towns in the north of our country are in a state of war, repelling the largest counter-revolutionary offensive characterized by huge logistical support that it is receiving from the CIA," said Cuadra

At the same news conference, army intelligence chief, Julio Ramos, said since the offensive began in mid-March the rebels had suffered 310 dead.

Capt Mario Aleman, head of the Sandinista navy in Corinto, the main Pacific port 65 miles northwest of Managua, said the USS GALLERY had been spotted some 30 to 40 miles from the coast

The officer claimed the frigate was "the mother ship" of the "pirana" speedboats that allegedly mined Corinto's waters and launched several mortar and machine-gun raids on the port's installations in the past two months

He said the U.S. war vessel was last seen March 27 and 29 when the last rebel attacks occurred.

"Since the pirana attacks began, 15 companeros (government troops) who bravely faced CIA mercenanes have died," Aleman said. He said the search for mines continued with divers, fishing nets and Nicaraguan coast guard vessels.

Aleman said that 29 mines have been found and set off in Corinto and Nicaragua's other leading Pacific port, Puerto Sandino, 36 miles south of Corinto. The third mined port is El Bluff on the Atlantic coast

The mines have dainaged about a dozen ships, including vessels from the Soviet Union, Holland and Japan

The U.S. Senate has overwhelmingly condemned CIA involvement in the minings and the House was voting on a similar resolution Thursday

In a communique released in Tegucigalpa, the FDN rebels said it has a "legitimate right to mine Nicaragiian ports in order to minimize the massive flow of arms from Cuba, the Soviet Union and their satellite countries destined for the FSLN (Sandinista Front for National

In Honduras, the rebels' claudestine radio station reported that attacks on the town of Waslala, in the remote Zelaya province, left 210 Nicaraguan soldiers dead and 60 wounded, while another 50 were killed in a nearby ambush

The FDN also issued what it called a plan to end the twoyear war calling for the replacement of the leftist Sandinista regime by a provisional government to rule until elections are held within a year.

The Sandinistas are expected to reject such a plan-

Democratic chair predicts summer deal-making frenzy

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

WASHINGTON - Democratic chairman Charles Manatt predicted Thursday the 1984 presidential nomination will be decided before the party's national convention, but it may take some mid summer wheeling and dealing to do it.

Manatt, in an interview with wire service reporters, rated as "zero" the chance that someone not now seeking the nomination will be drafted at a deadlocked convention in July. He also discounted the possibility that Jesse Jackson would walk out of the San Francisco convention in a platform fight

The Democratic National Committee hairman said it is "a realistic possibility" that former Vice president Walter Mondale, Sen Gary Hart and Jackson would end the primary season in June with no one in possession of the 1 967 votes needed to win the nomination

He said at that point there would be 'a whole lot of moves to get at the appropriate number of uncommitted delegates Manatt said he would expet "the mechanisms of politics" to be at work during the six weeks between the end of the primaries and the beginning of the national convention

Manati said that scenario is 'more likely" than having the convention open with no one ir control and he romination having to be settled by two or more conviction ballots

As for the "Young Lochinsar" theory

'(Jackson) realizes the unfairness of the Reagan policies.

-Charles Manatt

based on the premise that the convention would reach an impasse and move to draft a nominee not now in the Democratic picture. Manatt responded with one word "Zero

"I don't think the delegates are going to turn and pick someone else against the background of all the blood, sweat and tears of the past," he said

Manatt also said he did not believe vivil rights activist Jackson would walk out of the convention if he did not receive everything he wanted in the party platform

"He's not going to do that," Manatt

"He fully realizes, probably more than more Americans, the unfairness of the Reagan policies and the inability of the Democratic Party to have a successful race in 1984 if we don't have the fullest possible mobilization of all of our key voting constituencies within the party." the party chairman said. And he full well knows that our national black constituency is sery very significant and a very loval part of our volting constituences

Mondale now is leading the delegate ince with 1.04° compared to 5°1 for Hart and 152 for lackson with 331 uncommitted according to the United Press International count

New Orleans resists ordinance to protect homosexuals' rights

NEW ORLEANS - The

City Council rejected a gas rights ordinance Thursday, Jensing efforts by civil libertarians to make New Orleans the first major sits in the Deep South banning discrimination against homosexuals

Two council members who were expected to support the ordinance. including a co-sponser, voted against the proposal after five hours of debate, leaving the council in a 3-1 tie

Four votes were needed to pass the ordinance, which would have prohibited discrimination against gays in employment, housing and the use of public facilities such as restaurants, theaters and motels

Ordinance supporters said their fight will continue, with one gay woman saying "we'll regroup and we'll win

Council member Wayne Babovich, an ordinance co-sponsor, said unprecedented opposition by his constituents - including hundreds of calls and letters, and notes left on his windshield - led to his negative

"Overriding everything else was the fact my district was adamantly opposed to the ordinance," he said. "this has been a very hot and heavy issue."

I STIED PRINCISTERSALISMAL

GAINESVILLE—Fear of Friday the 19th—properly called tresskardecaphobia—traces its roots to the ancient Greeks and has been fueled through the ages by a series of untimely misfortunes, a classics professor said.

"The feat of number 13 is ancient. It goes back to 5th century B.C., to (philosopher) Pythagoras, who believed th whole universe was symbolically represented in numbers," University of Florida classics professor Dr. Aristotle Michopoulos said Thursday.

"One was the perfect number representing God. Three was good because it represented the equilateral triangle. The holy trinity is an example of this. Twelve was the end of the sacred numbers, and 13 came next, so it was considered evil." Michopoulos said.

Judas was the 13th disciple, which perpetuated the belief 13 was evil, he said

"When he left, that left 12—the sacred number," said Michopoulos, who has researched the Greek roots of the fear of 13

Unlocky 13 is a lucky number for practicioners of black magh, he added. "Magicians like it. What's bad for the good is good for the bad."

NASA, not wanting ausone to think that the nation's most technologically advanced agency was superstitious, went ahead and named a moon mission Apollo-Saturn 13. An oxygen tank ruptured, the mission was aborted and the three-man crew was lucky to get back to Earth alive.

Still, the ancient Greeks did not consider Friday the 13th particularly ominous

Tuesday the 13th was their unlucky day because Constantinople fell to the Turks on a Tuesday in 1453 A.D.

Filday got a had name hundreds of years later when Christ died on Friday

"Chuple that with the 13th and you have double trouble," Michopoulos said.

Friday hasn't been a good day for presidents either Abraham Lancoln was shot on Good Friday, April 14, 1865, and died the next day. Presidents Kenneds and McKinley were shot down on a Friday, too. James Polk died on a Friday. Nixon resigned on a Friday. Mary Jo Kopechne's death on a Iriday may have kept Ted Kennedy out of the White House.

Friday has also been disastrous for the economy. The financial panis of May 11, 1866, in London, and the ones in New York on Sept. 24, 1869, and Sept. 19, 1873, were all on Friday.

Another black Friday on May 25, 1979, marked the worst aviation disaster in U.S. history when an American Airlines DC 10 jethiner crashed in Chicago killing 275

In parts of England, buns with a cross baked into them—the Hot Cross Buns of the nursery rhymes—were baked on Fridays as a protection against the works of the devil—fire and pestilence. And Fridays were never wash days because supersition had it that the suds would turn into blood.

Through history, people have gone to extremes to avoid the number 13

Athenian lawmakers avoided meeting on the 13th of the month. Most tall buildings don't have a 13th floor

Many avoid traveling on the 13th for fear something bad will happen to them. Some sailors will not leave port on Friday.

Our drinking capital

PACIE NEWS SERVICE

Nevada has been toppled from its position as the hard-drinking capital of the country. The new capital is our nation's capital. Statistics show enough alcohol is sold in the District of Columbia to provide each Washingtonian with the equivalent of a fifth of 100-proof whiskey a week. The district is also tops in wine-drinking, while Nevadans are champion beer-guzzlers. On the other end of the spectrum, Utah is the driest state, with per-capita consumption only a third of D.C. Arkansas and West Virginia are also near the bottom of the barrel, although the figures naturally don't include sales of moonshine Overall, it seems fewer Americans are bending their elbows: consumption is down in nine of the ten top-drinking states.

Panel okays child victim protection bill

A Senate committee, hoping to spare young victims of sex crimes and child abuse the ordeal of retelling their stories in court, today voted to let them testify by

The Judiciary-Civil Committee also voted to double the $100-a day payment retired judges receive for handling courtroom overloads and moved to wipe out the "Askew rule" that complicated the recent Florida presidential primary. The committee also agreed to seek a constitutional amendment doubling the size of the Florida Supreme Court, separating criminal and civil divisions to lighten the court's docket

The committee easily approved proposals by Sens Edgar M Dunn, D-Daytona Beach, and Robert Crawford, D-Winter Haven, to permit videotaping of testimony in sexual abuse and child cruelty cases. The bill would expand the current law, which allows children under 11 to testify by tape, to cover all children below age 16

Defendants and their attorneys could be present during questioning and could object to showing juries portions of a tape considered unduly prejudicial at trial. Dunn and Crawford said their bill would not interfere with the constitutional right to confront an accuser, but would prevent defense attorneys from intimidating young victims by making them publicly repeat details of a "traumatic" sexual assault or beating

The committee also approved a bill (SB 500) by Sen-George Kirkpatrick, D-Gainesville, repealing the "winner take all" provision added to the Florida presidential primary law two years ago at the request of ex-Gov-Reuben Askew. The law was intended to help Askew in the presidential race, but he dropped out before the March 13 Florida primary

Sen Roberta Fox, D-Miami, won committee approval of her proposal (SB 159) to raise from $100 to $200 the amount paid retired judges for part-time service. The bill would limit recalled judges to 60 days service each year and would retain the current $100 limit for half-day service.

The committee agreed to introduce a constitutional amendment (PCB 11) increasing the size of the Florida Supreme Court from seven to 14 members, split into criminal and general law divisions. Another proposed committee bill would provide staggered terms for justices of the court, which had six of its seven current members

House wants control of energy windfalls

I NUMBER PRESS IN THE WATERNAL

The House Thursday gave initial approval to a bill that would let lawmakers, rather than the governor, decide how to spend millions from oil company anti-trust settlements.

House members rejected an amendment to require that first priority for the money be given to energy assistance grants to the poor and elderly, saying it would tie legislators' hands to decide the top needs at any given time

Opponents complained the bill would force the needy to wait for the spring legislative session each year to receive the benefits of the money, but were overruled by a majority that wanted control of the funds.

The bill is expected to receive final House approval

Florida periodically receives funds from national oil overcharge settlements. The money doesn't come in on a regular schedule, and existing law allows the governor-after consulting with legislative appropriations committees-to spend the funds as he sees fit.

So far Florida has received about $13 million from the antitrust settlements, and House analysts estimated the state could get more than $70 million in the near future-

Legislators said it is their responsibility to decide how the state will spend its money, and the oil overcharge settlements break that pattern.

INTERPRESENTATIONAL

CAPI CANAVERAL—With the reborn Solar Max satellite back on its sentry station in space, Challenger's "We pick up, repair and deliver" astronauts aimed for a Florida landing Friday NASA warned private pilots. Stay out of the way!

Forecasters were optimistic the weather would permit the crew of the "Ace Safellite Repair Co." to touch down at 7.09 a.m. EST to end the shuttle flight that moved America into a new era of space salvage.

"We're all real proud of you. We'll be looking forward to seeing you back at the ranch tomorrow." Jerry Ross in mission control in Hauston told astronauts Roberi Crippen. Disk Scibec, George "Pinky" Welson, James "Os." van Hoften and Terry Hart as they stowed their space geat Thursday.

"We're looking forward to it. It was mighty fun," said. Crippen. Larlier in a news conference from space. Crippen said the successful rescue, repair and redeploy of Solar Mas has opened a new era for the American space program.

"I think this particular mission showed me that satellite serveing is a visible thing that we as a country should be pursuing," said Crippen. "Satellite servicing is something that's here to stay."

Crippen opened the half hour news conference by

"Welcome to the Age Satellite Repair Co. We pick up,

NASA hopes the success of the shuttle mission will convince satellite designers their costly craft should be built to be serviced in space.

The bill for the tuneup to restore Solar May to full diength for the first time since November 1980 will probably run about $50 million. But it can $77 million to build and launch the satellite in 1980. To build a new Solar May would cost $235 million.

"If you just allow your mind to wander our to when we put a manned space station in orbit, the kind of thing we've seen in 41-C. the Solai Max repair, is just going to be a standard, exervdiay, routine operation that people are going to be constitutable with," said Cilenn Lunney, shuttle

Engineers try for a coal-powered shuttle

UNHOPRINISTERNATIONAL

MUSCLI SHOALS, Ala – NASA engineers, hoping to cut $1 million from the cost of each space shuttle flight, are at a TVA facility in north Alabama this week studying a process that turns coal into fuel for shuttles

"We're looking for ways to reduce operational costs for the space shuttle program," said Larry Manfresh, one of 10 engineers monitoring the process at the Tennessee Valley Authority's National Fertilizer Development Center.

"We feel using coal to form the fuel is the way for the future. And we are talking about a savings of at least $1 million per flight," he said.

NASA currently uses liquid hydrogen derived from natural gas, but with the supply of natural gas dwindling and nine shuttle flights slated for this year, NASA is concerned about fulfilling its needs.

"Once we run out of oil, natural gas is the next resource that we will run short of," said Manfredt "Coal is plentiful and its cost is going to remain about the same in the future. It's simply more economical"

The NFDC, built in 1980, conducts tests and demonstrations for industries nationwide. It's one of only a handful capable of converting coal to hydrogen

Harold Parker, a TVA spokesman in Muscle Shoals, said Thursday that WFDC has been talking to NASA "for the last couple of years" about the gasification process.

Converting hydrogen to coal "goes back many years ago.

The whole community of space users will become much more oriented to using the shuttle, the men and using the arrous capabilities that we have," he said

While the space agencs dreamed about the future, the immediate concern was the possibility of ground fog at Challenger's landing site.

Maj. Donald Greene, the chief forecaster for the shuttle program said the odds of favorable weather were 41, as good a forecast as possible on the Florida coast, where there is always a 20 percent chance of rain

We do have potential for some ground fog," said Greene "So we'll have to be watching that."

The mission's flight rules require " miles of visibility for Crippen to guide the spaceplane, which weighs more than 100 tons, onto a 314 mile long ribbon of concrete in the midst of a marsh at Kenneds Space Center

Challenger has two chances to land back at its spaceport Indas. The weather was also expected to be good at the nackup landing sites at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. and White Sands, N.M.

The space agency took out an unprecedented ad in a local newspaper to warn private pilots to stay away from the space center during the shuttle landing. Aerial sightseers have been a concern in the past

"People should be allowed access to what goes on here but not to the point where they hurt themselves or cause danger to the vehicle and the resources that we're using said Roger Zwige an aviation safety officer from the Johnson Space Center in Houston

Before packing up, the astronauts wrapped up their historic satellite rescue mission by putting the Solar Max satellite in orbit a little more than 3(0) miles up

Challenger's 50-foot robot arm released the satellite earls Thursday after tests showed Nelson and van Hoften had successfully fixed Solar Max during a spacewalk Thursday in Challenger's cargo bay

After releasing the 5 ton satellite. Challenger hovered nearby for 30 minutes while controllers in the Goddard Space Center in Greenbelt, Md., tried out radio commands to make sure their "bird" could fly on its own again

"It looks mights pretts out there," Crippen said as the silver satellite sparkled in the black void of space

Controllers later said they were confident six of the satellite's seven instruments would work to allow scientists to renew their studies of solar flares, massive outbursts of radiation from the sun that can disrupt communications on Farth.

The seventh instrument an X-ray sensor was not a target of the space repairs and scientists had not expected it to work answay

Besides fixing Solar Max, the astronauts launched a reusable satellite known as the Long Duration Exposure Facility. It will expose a variety of experiments to the hostile environment of space until it is picked up by another shuttle crew in February

But it was not the most modern technology. Back in World War II, the Germans did a lot of it," said Parker

"Our plant was the first to use modern techniques to demonstrate gasification of coal to produce hydrogen in a totally integrated setup," said Parker, who noted that the process now is "environmentally sound"

The method being tested at NFDC, developed by Monsanto, removes hydrogen from coal Tests will be concluded Sunday, and Manfredi said favorable results would increase the chances of NASA building a coalgasification plant at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

NASA headquarters in Washington is currently evaluating a feasibility study for such a facility, and a decision is expected this summer

Pentagon confirms anthrax leak

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONA

WASHINGTON—It happened five years ago, but the United States shied from confirming that deadly anthrax leaked from a Soviet biological warfare center

But the Pentagon now says the leakage possibly infected more than 3,000 people and caused "a significant number of causalties and deaths."

The confirmation of rumors and unofficial reports of the incident in the spring of 1979 at Sverdlovsk, in the central Soviet Union, appeared Tuesday in the Pentagon's third edition of "Soviet Military Power" in a chapter dealing with chemical and biological weapons.

Pentagon spokesman Michael Burch said the report, accompanied by a drawing with an arrow depicting the southerly downwind path of airborne anthrax as it traveled from the biological research facility through Swerdlovsk, marked the first time the United States acknowledged unofficial accounts of the accident

The United States does not produce biological weapons and the document accused the Soviets of violating a 1972 treats that bans "research, development, production and possession of biological agents and toxins for warfare purposes."

Anthrax is an infectious and usually fatal disease that occurs among cattle and sheep and, occasionally, man. It is characterized by ulcerations of the skin and enlargement of the solid.

"There are at least seven biological warfare centers in the USSR that have the highest security and are under the strictest military control," the booklet said. "One of these is located in the city of Sverdlovsk."

"In the spring of 1979, an accidental release of an anthrax agent occurred there, either as a result of a leakage in a containment system or an explosion. A very large quantity of anthrax traveled at least four kilometers (2.5 miles) downwind from the facility and caused a significant number of casualties and deaths.

"More than 3,000 Soviet citizens may have been infected. As a result of the accident, large sections of Sverdlovsk were placed under quarantine and military control. Strenuous efforts were made by Soviet doctors to treat victims, and a large-scale effort to decontaminate the area was undertaken."

The Soviets said the "anthrax problem" was caused by the illegal sale of meat but the report asserted, "The evidence indicates instead that the victims suffered from pulmonary anthrax caused by the inhalation of an anthrax agent, which could only have escaped from the military facility."

Soviet research has tried to link genetic engineering with the biological warfare program in a move that "could open a large number of possibilities," the document said.

ACCIDENT, Md. Doomsavers in other cities may avoid black cats on Fridas the Llth or stay home rather than chance disaster, but the day is "no big deal" to the townsfolk of Accident

"It's just another of day in this of town," says Wayne Linez, the $4 a month mayor of the farming town of about 250 people in the western footbills of the Allenheim Mountains.

"People here aren't superstitions and Fraiz, a farmer and businessinar." They rereligious, good people."

The mayor says about 90 percent of the town's residents, most of them senior citizens of German ancestry, attend one of the community's three churches on Sundays.

At Accident's only bar and restaurant—a warm, pine paneled business on tree-lined Main Street—resident Lillian Nielson echoed Fratz between sips of a draft beer

"There ain't nobody superstitious of Friday the 13th around here," Nielson says "The only thing I'm superstitious about is planting onion during a full moon. They'll come right back out of the ground

Priest finds odd sign glued to window

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

ST. AUGUSTINE—A sign charging the Varican with trying to take over the world greeted a priest arriving at the Prince of Peace Catholic Church to say morning mass.

The sign, professionally printed, was glued to the outside of a stained glass window, Father Ed Pawlak said Thursday.

Pawlak said similar signs have been found on doors and windows of Catholic churches in large cities across the nation in recent weeks.

"I believe the first ones appeared in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago," said the priest, who added he was more amused than surprised at the poster

"What did surprise me is that the movement or whoever is behind the signs—would come into a small town like St Augustine," he said

The sign found posted early Wednesday read "Warning People (magazine), Newsweek, Time and Life are secretly owned by the Vatican - The Vatican owns the major networks and newspapers throughout the country.

"The Vatican is trying to take over the world," it concluded. Pawlak said church groundskeepers removed the sign.

Bowden stressing fundamentals

BY DAVIDLEE SIMMONS

Lundamentals Bases Execution Almost every time you talk to Florida State head football coach Bobby Bowden, those three words keep popping up.

Normally, they're brushed ande as all too familiar cliches that don't make for very exciting stories for us sports writers.

But this time, Bowden has used these words so many times that you finally have to start taking him sersously

The Seminoles of 1984 are going back to the basics, are going, back to the fundamentals, and are simply going to work on execution. Nothing fancy, nothing showy. Just plain old football that wins games.

That is something the Seminoles did not do enough of in 1983, so flowden decided to go back to the drawing board. With defensive coordinator, Jack Stanton having been aiked to leave, Bowden brought in Mickey Andrews to initial a defense so simple "that even I can understand it."

Integral of an offense filled with trust plays and long bambs. Benden went with a methodical, run oriented offense in the Seminoles' season-ending 28.1 Peach Bowl saturs over North Carolina. That same game winning offense will be the same type used in 1984, according to these left.

During the Orange Bowl years of 1979 and 1980, the Seminoles boasted one of (if not the) strongest defenses in the nation, while at the same time used a simple offense that conservatively mixed the pass with the run tespecially with Ra's Stockardla quarterback in 1980.

Base ally that s what Bowden wants to do go back to that simple yet suressful formula. So this spring's drills, it reality have not been very exciting to watch. Bowden himself found it hard at times to find anything exciting to say. I don't know what to tell you folks," he said after one praatice. "It's just the same old thing."

In face, this spring has been so slow that Bowden admits the team still has a long, long way to go. "I'd say out of about 100 percent, we're about 20 or 40 percent of where we want to be," he said emphasically.

Injuries this spring have presented Bowden from getting a good look at his starting unit, so many of his projected first teamers were unable, at one point or another to participate in Bowden's overhaul. Most of them, however should be able to win their jobs back before the fall. Othermay find themselves in heated battle, though

Starting quarterback. Free Thomas fell to injury in the opening days of practice, and kirk Coker came out of the pack to establish himself as the first unit player. Both are option oriented quarterbacks that can also throw fairly well, so there could be a battle in the fall.

He's (Thomas) definitely missed very valuable playing time, but there's one thing about him, he started a ball game (the Peach Bowl) for us last year and we won it." Bowden vaid. "He's undefeated here at Florida Static and that's why I want him in the driver's seat. Eric, to me, has earned the right to be the number one quarterback."

With starting tailback Greg Allen excused to participate in track, Rosey Snipes has been the running back to watch in practice, averaging around 10 yards a run in scrimmages. Last year, the two rotated almost evenly at tailback, so being a starter here may only be a formality.

Here is a look at the offense, defense and special teams that the Seminoles will have this year, judging from this spring's performances.

OFFENSE. Florida State will field an offense next year that will use the option a lot more than last year, hence the receiving antics of Jessic Hester and Hassan Jones may have to take a back seat, according to Bowden. "They'll probably have to give up a little of the glory," Bowden said. "But we'll still use the pass. We may run the ball down the field, and then throw for a touchdown. It all depends."

The focus, though, will be on the quarterback and his option abilities. Everything else may be a supporting role.

Quarterbacks: the Seminoles have two experienced option quarterbacks in Thomas (6 foot, 192 pounds) and Coker (6 foot, 173 pounds). Both will be juniors next year, so the position is in good shape. Danny McManus (6-1, 180 pounds) and Bob Davis (6-4, 190 pounds) give the

Bobby Bowden stalking the sidelines during the Florida State's 53-14 loss at Gainesville last year

Seminoles two adept passers who are also not well-acquanted with the option yet. They still have a chance to contribute should the option attack fail and Thomas and Coker not prove their passing ability. Doubtful, however, Ben Thompson and J.P. Connolly are behind them. The Seminoles also have Dean Reide, a 6.6 transfer from Clenison who will not be ready until the 1983 veason.

Running Bucks: How deep can an area be? FSU easily has the best tailbacks corps in the nation in potential Heisman trophs candidate and All-American Greg Allen (6 (60)), 200 pounds) and Rosey Snipes (5-9, 172 pounds). Though Allen missed spring drills, he should return in the fall as number one. Snipes suffered a shoulder injury in last Saturday's settimmage, and may not play in the Garnet and Gold game. Behind them is jitterbug Darfin Holloman (5-2, 165 pounds), who should be able to squeeze in some playing time. Prized recruit Wayne Denson (6-1, 220 pounds) could come in this fall and change the picture, though not much.

Cletis Jones (6 foot, 215 pounds) will probably get the nod at fullback, though last year's main starter. Cedric Jones (5.9, 187 pounds) still has a shot. Bowden is basically favoring the blocker over the runner here. Behind them is another solid blocker. Horace Wilmot (5-11, 223 pounds). Bowden once hinted that he wouldn't mind seeing Allen and Snipes in the same backfield, with Snipes at fullback. He tried it against Florida, with mixed results. "Now, we'd only use it as a desperation move." Bowden said.

Receivers: Despite the loss of Weegie Thompson and Tony Johnson, the Seminoles will not be hurting in this area. Hester (6 foot, 173 pounds) and Hassan Jones (6-1, Special Teams. When your starting placekicker and punter return, you're supposed to be happy, right? Wrong Bowden was very disappointed with placekicker Phil Hall's performance last year tiwo extra points and three field goal attempts missed in the 17.16 loss to Miami) and said the kisking game would be a concern in the spring. Several walk ons, however, have not been able to beat out Hall for the job as of yet, though Sam Zighelboim and Mark Lively have shown promise with their distance. Barry Barco will continue to handle the kickoffs

The jury may still be on the placekicking job, however, as Bowden says he wants to get a look at incoming freshman Derek Schmidt in the fall before making any final

Louis Berry, who broke Rohn Stark's freshman average last year, returns at punter

"The first few weeks of spring training I was getting real excited about our kickers because one of 'em kicked a 53 yarder one day in practice," Bowden said. "Then our scrimmage last Saturday, gee, those kids missed every other kick, and that bothers me again, because we need that consistency That freshman (Schmidt) might have to come in here and do it, if one of these guys can't get with

Saturday's Garnet and Gold game will start at 3 p.m. in Doak Campbell Stadium. Unlike previous years, the first team offense will go against the second unit defense, while the second-unit offense will take on the first-unit defense their biggest toll on the squad. The bonus is several backups have received more attention in the spring Projected starters like John Ionata, Parrish Barwick, Pablo Lopez and Jimbo Thompson all fell to injuries in practice. leaving the situation a little confusing. Going into the fall, look for Ionata (6.3, 263 pounds) and Lopez (6.6, 245 pounds) to be the starting tackles. Backing them will be Thompson (6-2, 234 pounds). Danns Morris (6-1, 238 pounds) and Tim Hebron (6.5, 256 pounds). Jamie Dukes (6.1, 290) pounds) has one guard slot nailed down, and is a potential All American candidate. "He's made a lot of improvement this spring. Bowden said.

If Barwick's broken foot can be restructured through surgery, he should be able to return in the fall.

At center, the 'Noles were left with their number one and number two players (10m McCormick and Sain Restivo) gone due to graduation. Nevertheless, thanks to the development of Jerry Riopelle (6.1, 258 pounds) this spring, the position should be in good. Though not excellent

Again, Panton will probably be used more as a lineman than a receiver at right end, and his contribution could be a key on the option

DEFENSE. This was the main project this spring Under Mickey Andrews, the defense has tried to become much more simple, and therefore, more easy to understand for the players (and coaches). "What we're trying to do is build a more sound, solid defense " asserted Bowden. "One that will stretch but not bend "

"What is the difference in something like that? Number one, we're trying to be more fundamentally sound with less scheming, which we hope can prevent the big play and the inconsistency that we've had the last three years. We play North Carolina and they don't score a touchdown. We play Florida and we give 53 points. Up, down, up and down, up and down. We're trying to get in a defensive scheme and try and teach it in a way that will be consistent We got a long way to go, but that's the main thing we're trying to accomplish."

During the latter stages of practice, the defense has slowly been getting a grasp of the coaches' scheme, and has started to mold a little

Wrought with graduation losses, however, the whole defensive unit will need plenty of time to develop as a group, along with handling the burden of learning a new SYSTEM

Bowden said while the defense will be more simple, the coaches will gradually introduce more plays over the course of the season to give a little diversity

Defensive Line: Probably the most hit by the graduation The line lost All-American tackle Alphonso "Chub"

Henderson pleaded no of attempting to bribe two

The plea, which does not admit guilt but which catries the same penalty as a guilty plea came as his preliminary hearing on the charges was about to get under was.

Municipal Court Judge W.H. Winston Jr. as-epted the plea, and ordered Henderson to return to court for sentensing June 1. Henderson faires a possible term of five years and eight months in state

Henderson was charged last year with forced oral copulation, sexual battery and false imprisonment for allegedly molesting a 15-year old guadriplegic after luring them to his Long Beach apartment

While out on bail pending his April 25 trial, according to Deputy District Attorney Don Davis, Henderson had a former neighbor. Richard Belcher, contact the girls and offer them $10,000 to testify that Henderson had not molested them.

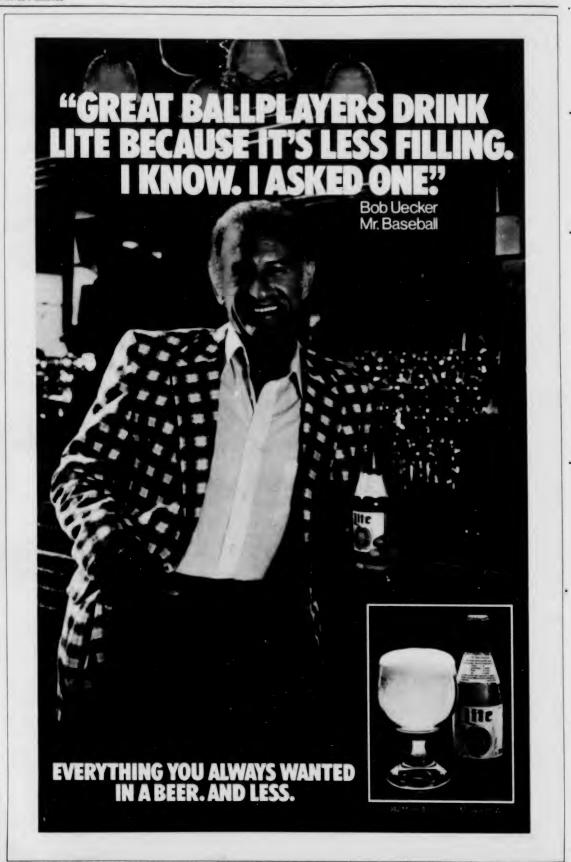

The older girl, however, contacted police. When Belsher handed over the first installment on the bribe $500 - be and Henderson were arrested.

Belcher also pleaded no contest to the charges Thursday. He faces a maximum of three years and eight months in prison when sentenced May 10.

At Henderson's preliminary hearing on the preliminary hearing on the sex charges, the 15-year-old testified that when she and her friend entered Henderson's apartment, the former football player pulled out a gun and forced them to disrobe and take drugs.

Police later found a 38 caliber handgun in the apartment

Henderson pleaded innocent to the sex charges, saying he took the girls home after they solicited him on the street. He said he pulled an unloaded gun when he found one of them stealing his money.

Hurricanes set for Seminoles

After losing three out of four to Miami on the road, Florida State hopes to turn that around by hosting the Hurricanes for a three game set this weekend

The (31-1) Hurricanes come into the game on a three-game win streak, while the (35-19) Seminoles have won their last two games in a row. The Seminoles hold a 63-44.2 lifetime edge over the Hurricanes

'In our schedule as an independent, every game is important," Miami coach Ron Fraser said "But I think the kids get a little extra pumped up for Florida State

Fraser, who has an 851 295 7 record over 21 seasons at Miami, said the Horida State Miami rivalry is a good one that has produced mans evening games. "The (FSU) fans are great. They seem to get on us a little bit "

Despite their record, Miami may be having what, at least for them, is considered a disappointing season. Just like the Scrainoles, the Hurricanes are in danger of losing more games in a single season than they ever have I ast year's team went 61-21. The 61 wins tied a Miami record for the most wins ever in a season, but the 21 losses was the first time a Hurricane team has ever lost more than 18 games. The came after the Hurricanes won the NCAA championship in 1982 pretty good," Fraser said. According to Fraser, one of the Hurricanes' biggest problems this year has been injuries, but he noted that everyone is now healthy

I can't say what I expect (from FSU). but I know they've improved (from February)," Fraser said "But I think that we have, too

For tonight's game, which has been moved from a 7 p.m. to an 8 p.m. start, the Seminoles will throw sophomore righthander Doug Little 16.5, 5.28 earned run average), while Miami will counter with Rob Souza (4.1, 5.80 ERA). On Saturday, the Seminoles will start converted reliever Doug Treadway (2.0, 5.98 FRA). Miami will go with righthander Kevin Shears (5 L. 2.64 LRA). For the final game on Sunday, which has also been moved from 2 p.m. to 1 pm start, the Seminoles will go with freshman Ray Revak (9-3), while Miami will pitch Alain Patenaude (4-2).

The rest of the probable Miami lineup looks like this center fielder Doug Shields ( 365, 16 doubles), rightfielder Calvin James (301-20 steals), first baseman Chris Hart ( 182), designated hitter Darren Mandel (127), third baseman Clarke Lange (1309, 12 HR's), left fielder Phil Lane (243), shortstiip Don Rowland (355), catcher Julio Solis (283) and second LUNCH BUFFET Friday Menu Szechuen Hot Chicken Beef w. #### Braves hear boo-birds

ATLANTA - Dale Murphy, the National League's Most Valuable Player the last two years, heard the boos at Atlanta Stadium after striking out with the bases loaded for the third time in seven games

Murphy's frustration, which reached a peak in Wednesday night's 6-1 loss to the New York Mets, is symbolic of the Braves' miserable (2-5) start this season, which follows the record 13-0 jump in 1982 and a 7.1 start last season

The boos came in the eighth inning and climaxed a night in which the rangy centerfielder didn't get the ball out of the infield in four tries. He acknowledged he heard the boos, although manager Joe Torre said he thought they were directed more at the team than any individual

"I don't think they booed him as much as us not scoring with the based loaded,"

Murphy, Bob Horner and Chris Chambliss-the heart of the Braves' attack-are hitting 160, 125 and 174, respectively, after seven games. Chambliss has the only home run in the group and Murphy has yet to drive in a run

"Everybody counts on those guys," said Torre before departing on a six-game road trip. "When they don't hit, the others have a little bit of letdown I think that's true of any ballclub."

Torre said the key is for the trio-especially Murphy-to just relax.

"Murph doesn't have the ball zeroed in," said Torre. "The more opportunities he gets and doesn't do it, the more he presses

With the team batting average at .191, more pressure has been placed on the Atlanta purching staff, already weakened by the absence of Pascual Perez, just released from a Dominican jail and facing a possible suspension by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn for drug possession, and lefts reliever Terry Forster, on the disabled list with tendonitis in his throwing arm

Ken Dayley, tabbed to replace Phil Niekro in the staiting rotation, has been victimized by shodds fielding and has lost his first two starts without getting past the fourth inning. Meanwhile, the 45-year old. Niekro, released because the Braves deemed him washed up, has won his first two starts with the New York Yankees

"We would certainly liked to have started better," said catcher Bruce Benedict "But since we started so well the last couple of years, maybe in the back of your mind you figured this was due

We just need something to get us started. We need to pay attention to it but we're good players and we will snap out of

Torre said there may be some lineup changes on the road trip to shake things up

"But I can't tell you right now what they'll be because it's something I have to think about," he said

The Braves, who already trail the red-hot San Diego Padres (6-1) by four games in the National League West, play the Padres four games starting Thursday night before wrapping up the road trip with two games at Cincinnati.

"It doesn't really matter who we play," said Torre. "If we play our kind of game, we can beat anybody. It's just a matter of us getting our stuff together.

Atmosphere of ballparks changing

AND CODY SHEARER

WASHINGTON A few years back, former San Francisco Giants manager Alvin Dark lamented in his memoirs that there were few true students of baseball-only the armchair variety Everybody, my 83-year-old mother included " wrote Dark, "thinks they learned all there was to know about it at puberty.

But what bothered Dark has helped make baseball the national pastime. In the stands as on the field, everyone is an expert Indeed, only at a baseball game can a corporate president six next to a plumber and discuss the merits of a rookie pitcher's curve hall

Unfortunately, America's baseball stadiums may not deserve their melting-pot image any longer. The whole meaning of an outing to a ball park has changed for the

For starters, baseball fans today are increasingly separated by economic means. Financially pressed ball clubs have undermined the populist tradition of ball parks by offering a series of multi-priced tickets that matches the stratification of an opera matinee. A walk through any box seat section these days reveals a controlled, sober crowd that munches on nachos

In Baltimore, for example, a fan has a choice of purchasing seven different types of seats. lower boxes ($9 (0)), terrace boxes ($8 (00), upper boxes ($6 50), lower and upper reserve (56 00), general admission ($4.75) and the bleachers ($3.50). Similar choices are offered in other big league

Moreover, good seats for weekend games and contests between intensely rival teams are harder to come by In Chicago this season, the chances of purchasing a box. seat for a White Sox game won't be good unless one's a season ticket holder for weekend games

Without most fans knowing II. businesses, which according to the baseball commissioner's office purchase 80 percent of all box seats, have consumed the best survey of team ticket sales this year suggests more season passes are being sold than ever before The world champion Baltimore Orioles, for example, had 6,032 season ticket holders last year. This season, the Birds have unloaded more than 12,000 such tickets Likewise, in Los Angeles, the Dodgers have had to place a ceiling of 27,000 seats for season ticket holders

The price of baseball tickets is increasing for everyone. Half of all American League teams have raised their ticket prices this season (only a quarter of all National league teams have done so). The average price of a ticket to a major league baseball game is now $5.93

Meanwhile, the traditional atmosphere of ball parks is dissipating too. You need only look at what's being offered to eat there to understand how. Gone are the old days of inexpensive hot dogs, peanuts and popearn. Everything is more expensive and exotic at baseball stadiums. Now you can bus shrimp at Fenway Park and Swedish ice cream at Shea Stadium, not to mention manicotti at the Dodgers' home in Chaver

"We're serving specialty foods at stadiums to keep our new chentele happy. explained an official with the Harry M. Stevens Co., which has the concession rights at many ball parks.

Of course, the corporate clients who purchase season tickets aren't the only ones to blame for the changing nature of American ball parks. Nor, for that matter, are the financially strapped clubs. They're only doing what's necessary to stay solvent in an era of enormous player salaries

Equally culpable are Congress and the White House Until they end business tax deductions for sports tickets, Big Business will continue to consume large blocks of tickets, making it almost impossible for fans to gain entry to stadiums built with their tax money. We don't espect such a revolutionary change to occur. But maybe other people will start to wonder when their ball parks install conference rooms for use by high paying fans during the seventh inning stretch

A talk with Florida's elder statesman

LeRoy Collins is one of the most respected elder statesmen in the South. An attorney, he has served in the state Senate, on presidential civil rights commissions, and as Governor of the State of Florida from 1954 to 1960. He is also isomething of a broadcast journalist, airing his periodic commentaries on Florida Public Radio.

He is a North Florida native married to Mary Call, great granddaughter of Richard Keith Call, one of Florida's first territorial governor. Though he musis he is now on the marging of public life, he is a close observer of national and state is one. D. K. Roberti talked with him about his political life and times, his ties to thus area and his passionate affactment to the Grove, the beautiful family place of the Cally.

Governor Colling Tell me a little about what you're interested in talking about

D.A. Robert: I'd just like to have a general conversation, and you about some things from the past, some things going on now. Like how about the presidential race what do you think happened to Reuben 4skew?

I wish I knew but I don't know. I haven't had an opportunity to talk with him. It's hard for me to understand, really, why he didn't do better than he did. The real Reuben Askew that I think I know, and I think Floridians know, didn't come through in that campaign.

Do you think that Mondale will win the

I'm on the sidelines now, realize. Politics is still a fascinating operation but I don't feel involved in it like I have most of my mature life. I'd be guessing. I think when the time for the convention comes, the delegates will be looking for a winner. I think Jackson's role is quite aside from getting elected president. He has solidified black activity, black involvement. That's going to be a meaningful thing. But I don't see him as a viable candidate for president and I don't think he's thinking in those terms.

'It became my generation's responsibility to move and your generation's to accept and cement these changes. A political leader who doesn't come to grips with the actions and passions of his time does so at the risk of not having lived.'

Let's go a little closer to home—Florida politics. Tell me about how you felt about the death penalty when you were governor and how you feel now.

Well, when I became governor, I felt that the death penalty was wrong, and hoped it would be changed, abolished in Florida. In my first message to the first Legislature that I had as governor, I recommended the repeal, the abolishment of the death penalty. They thrashed it out in the Legislature and defeated a law I hoped would pass. So then I was confronted as governor with the oath of office under the Constitution to support, protect and defend it. And also to uphold the laws of the state.

A governor finds it difficult to put himself above the law. I felt an obligation to enforce the law and the death penalty was a part of our law. I set up a procedure for examining very, very carefully the records of every person who was given the death penalty in the courts over and beyond the review that the courts were giving. We were hoping we would find a basis for commuting the sentence to life imprisonment. And in many cases we did I ven so I signed death warrants

Have you changed in your thicking?

I have, since that time, agonized over this. I have never wavered from the fact that it's wrong. I mean it's freak to It's usually the weak, the poor, the triendless, and it used to be the black. It was aways the black man that raped a white woman, never a white man that raped a black woman.

You continue to show your opposition

I don't get out and bang on the fences and participate in the demonstrations about it; but I start with the proposition that human life, the protection of human life, to the greatest goal. When these heinous crimes are committed—there's a lot of these people I feel should be put up for life and not allowed to associate in society again. But I don't think they should be murdered by the state.

What about civil rights. You've been very much involved in the movement as a statesman

I grew up as a boy here, accepting like everybody also that segregation was the right and proper, standard thing of our society

Had I been disposed to openly say I was for the abolishment of segregation at that time, I would have rendered myself completely impotent as a leader. So I didn't say that I didn't say that. In fact I spoke, on some occasions in rather warm words, of accepting segregation. But I also did this that no other governor could do at that time, or did do at that time I said two things over and over again. I said that the Supreme Court had, under our system, the power to say what was and was not constitutional so when the Supreme Court said it was not conditiutional to segregate public schools, that was the law. I also said that we must avoid violence and we must recognize that black people had suffered Demendous disadvantages and that we had to find ways to help them oversome those disadvantages. We had in do this working together; white and black, and that was like heresy in those days. It was It's almost unbelievable now, but it was like heress They were running arisund the mansion out there and planting crosses and burning crosses right there on the manuon grounds Because I was talking like this!

How did you deal with that?

Well, in response to these things, and the lunch-counter demonstrations, I made a speech in Jacksonville, on the television said in that speech that the people of Florida had a right to know how their governor felt about this. I said that we were a land of the law and we were going to enforce the law and the law at that time allowed a merchant who had a department store to accept the patronage of black people generally in his store but not in one department (the lunch counters). I said it may be legally right, but in my opinion it is morally wrong. Then I said I am appointing a state wide bi-racial commission to examine this situation, to give us leadership. I want black people and white people sitting down together.

This was jolting to people at that time. Well, it was a Sunday afternoon around Turn to COLLINS, page 5

Race for GOP chairman: setback for Hawkins?

Jeanie Austin was elected chairman of the Florida Aepublican Party Saturday in a close three-s race that some observers say is a political setback for U.S. Sen. Paula Hawkins

Austin, the party's former vice chairman from Orlando, defeated Winter Haven citrus grower Bill Rales on the second ballot by a vote of 84 73 to become the first woman state chairman

Former state Rep. Ander Crenshaw of Jacksonville finished third on the first ballot

The race was decided Saturday by the 157 member Florida Republican i secutive Committee

Austin, 50, was a surprise winner, to say the least. She and Hawkins are old enemies, and Hawkins, according to party insiders, did her best to get Rales elected. Hawkins said she did no lobbying for Raley, who chaired her campaign in 1980

Insiders indicated Hawkins was trying to dominate the state committee, to control GOP financing in 1986 - when she is expected to face a re-election challenge from Cov-Bob Graham

Crenshaw, meanwhile, had the backing of influential GOP leader L.F. "Tommy" Thomas of Panama City, cochairman of President Reagan's re-election drive in

When the final vote was announced, there was little evidence of the bitter, months-long struggle to gain control of the party

"I can get along with anyone," said Austin "I'm willing to go the extra mile

Hawkins commented. "Contrary to all the things you heard and read in the paper, I did not get involved in this race. You got no letter from me telling you who to vote

The chairman serves for two years and earns a salary of

In other races, Republicans elected former State Chairman Bill Taylor of Jacksonville national committeeman and Hawkins, who was unopposed, national committeewoman

Chester Cleo of Vero Beach was elected vice chairman of the state party, and DiDi Biggs of Santa Ross Beach was elected treasurer. Mars Ann Morse of Orlando was elected

Klan trial ends; all found not guilty

UNITED PRESSINTERNATIONAL

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C.—An allwhite federal jury Sunday found nine Ku Klux Klansmen and American Nazis innocent of violating the civil rights of participants in a 1979 "Death to the Klan" march in which five members of the Communist Workers Party ded

Five of the nine accused were previously cleared of state murder charges, and all were exuberant at the verdict Defendant Edward Dawson, an FBI informant while a member of the Klan, covered his face in his hands and sobbed.

"I just think I died and went to Heaven," Dawson said. "It was a clean sweep, just like I thought it would be the day we walked in here."

Defendant Virgil Griffin, the Grand Dragon of a Ku Klux Klan faction, raised his arms straight over his head when the innocent verdicts were read by court clerk William Ivor

But relatives of the victims were outraged when the all white us man, six woman federal jury announced its decision

"This is a green light for the Klan and Nazis to murder people on the basis of their color," said Dale Sampson, wife of one of the dead communists

Five members of the Communist Workers Party died Nov 3, 1979, shortly after a caravan of vehicles driven by Klansmen and Nazis armed with guns and eggs arrived at the staging area for the communist-sponsored anti-klan march

The Greensboro shooting was filmed by television news crews and the sideotapes became key pieces of evidence in the threemonth trial.

U.S. District Judge Thomas A. Flanners instructed the jury Thursday it could not consist anyone on civil rights charges unless it first decided the Klansmen and Nazis went to the rally because of their hatred of

The defendants claimed throughout the trial they had appeared at the rally solely to show their opposition to communism and Flannery said a political motive, by itself, could not justfy a conviction

Prosecutors maintained members of the Klan Nazi caravan fired the first 11 shots in the 39 shot melee that ended in the deaths

But defense attorness argued the source of the third, fourth and fifth shots could not be pinpointed, thus raising the possibility the defendants were being fired upon and returned fire in self-defense

The verdicts came at the end of the third dus of deliberations. Jurors, deciding not to take a break for church, began deliberations at 9.40 a m EST Sunday, the beginning of the 15th week of the trial

Jurors showed no emotion as they walked into the courtroom with the verdict

The panel had returned to the courtroom twice earlier Sunday, both times with questions about acharge against Griffin and Dawson of conspiring to obstruct a federal investigation.

The first time, the jurors wanted to known whether the obstruction had to deal specifically with federal officers or whether the jury also could consider an attempt to obstruct the work of state and local law enforcement agents.

District Judge Thomas A. Flanners said the government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt there was an attempt to delay or prevent communications to federal investigators. He said an attempt to prevent or delay communications only to state and local police would not be grounds for a consection on the charge.

The second time, the juriors wanted to know whether the two men had to know beyond a reasonable doubt that thes were evading federal law enforcement agents. Flanners replied the government must prove only that the defendants conspired to keep other people from giving information to the FBI

Flanners noted the Klansmen were not accused of evading arrest

Poll: tourists nix casino gambling

LNITED PRESSINTERNATIONAL

FORT LAUDERDALE — Legalized casino gambling has little appeal to Florida tourists — the very group it is designed to attract, according to a poll released Sunday.

A survey of 500 frequent vacationers from Chicago and Philadelphia, two of south Florida's top five tourism markets, indicates an overwhelming 5.1 majority feels strongly casino gambling would make Florida a less attractive vacation site.

Respondents from the two areas rejected the prospect of casino gambling by 65.7

percent to 12.7 percent, with another 21.6 percent indifferent, according to a poll conducted by the Fort Landerdale News and Sun-Sentinel.

"I'd go anyplace but somewhere with casino gambling," said Nathan Corwith, 58, a Chicago insurance executive who visits south Florida once a year

"No way I'd want casino gambling." added Philadelphia resident Susan Collins, 42. "They haven't done a thing for Atlantic City. We've got a summer hone in New Jersey, 20 minutes from the casinos, and I wouldn't think of going there."

A victory for science Another threat to your right of freedom of inquiry was turned aside

Another threat to your right of freedom of inquiry was turned aside Saturday when the Texas Board of Education reluctantly agreed to leave the teaching of science to scientists. At issue was the authority of Texas to impose upon its public school children a religious notion disguised as science, and to extend that authority nationwide because of the economics of the textbook publishing business.

The board decided to repeal a rule that required science textbooks to give "scientific creationism" equal footing with the theory of evolution as an explanation for the origin of life and its subsequent development. The rule was adopted some ten years ago at the urging of fundamentalist religious groups which, 100 years after The Origin of Species, still weren't buying Charles Darwin's idea that species, including Homo supiens, developed through an evolutionary process based upon natural selection.

Not unexpectedly, those fundamentalists were distressed by the rule change. Norma Gabler, who with her husband Mel spearheaded the creationist movement in Texas, decreted the rule change as a result of "intimidation and threat" She's got a point the board relented on the creationist rule only when the state attorney general opined that it was unconstitutional under the doctrine of separation of church and state, and announced that he would not defend it against a pending lawsuit.

But, of course, the Gablers' initial success was itself the result of the pressure politics they applied against the Board of Education, Indeed, an interesting sidelight to the entire controversy is the degree to which politics, not science, determines what went into Texas' textbooks

Make no mistake: the creationist controversy is a political issue, not one of science. The fundamentalists tried to legislate ideas. Thanks to the Texas attorney general, they have received their rebuke.

In short, the creationism rule stood the whole principle of science on its head. Science presumes only to seek answers to questions about the natural world. To do so, scientists agree upon certain rules of their own. Foremost among these rules is the abandonment of preconceived notions about the subjects of their studies. A scientists seeks to shape our understanding of the world through experimentation and observation. If the answers discovered through that process call preconceptions or myths into question, it is not the scientists' concern, but the theologian's.

But the fundamentalists weren't satisfied with that. Because they misunderstood the difference between science and theology, they viewed instruction in evolutionary theory as a threat to the Biblical version. They failed to understand what scientists meant when they talked about "theory," and so they invented creationsim in order to give a religious idea scientific airs. They then demanded it be given equal time with evolution — to do otherwise, they charged, would be censorship.

But failure to include creationsim in a science text is not censorship, because creationism by definition is not science. Its proponents knew the answer they wanted; it was just a matter of going through the proper contortions to find it. In fact, the creationists sought to censor the evolutionists by dilution, they couldn't kill evolutionary theory because it's usefulness to an understanding of the world has gained it widespread acceptance, but they could discredit by watering it down. In Texas, they won, at least for a time.

But the problem didn't stop at Texas' borders.

Unlike many other states, Texas doesn't allow local school boards to decide which textbooks to buy — it buys books for all its local districts at the same time. Indeed, Texas is the fourth-largest textbook market in the country, spending $65 million each year. That means it enjoys extraordinary influence among textbook publishers. Publishers can't afford to cater to every market in which they sell, so they cater to their biggest customers. Consequently, books written to comply with Texas' creationism rule ended up in schools all over the country.

Changing that rule won't affect the undue influence policy-makers in Texas have over the nation's textbooks: it might mean, however, the purging of creationism from science texts.

For that reason we applaud the board's decision. Fundamentalist Christians are entitled to their beliefs, but they are not entitled to use public schools to propagate them.

FROM THE GRASSROOTS

Equal access to education is a right

BY MANNING MARABLE

Predictably, the Reagan administration's response to the outcry of black educators and administrators has been contemptuous. For example, last year the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights ordered a study of eight colleges for the "effects of student aid cuts on institutions with large numbers of black and Hispanic students." President Reagan succeeded in restructuring the commission in the effort to obtain a clear voting majority for his rightwing views on desegregation and affirmative action. As a direct consequence, this January, the commission voted five to three to cancel its study on black and Latino higher education Hispanic Reaganite Linda Chavez, director of the commission, informed the press, "Unless the commission wishes to establish that federal student financial aid is a civil right guaranteed to members of minority groups, this project would appear clearly beyond our jurisdiction." Since the results of the study clearly confirmed the human destruction created by the budget cuts of 1981 83, the administration callously chose to bury the truth

Chavez' role in the attacks against minority educational opportunity is more than a little ironic Growing up in a poor Chicano neighborhood in Albuquerque, New Mexico, she attended the University of Colorado, and earned a degree in English literature while on a federal education grant. Now Chavez claims that "the government policy to provide student aid on the basis of need in not a civil right." Her political backwardness extends into primary education as well, since her voxal opposition to public school desegregation and affirmative action hiring policies for school teachers and administrators elevated her into her current position.

If indeed the decline of black colleges was the product of accellerated desegregation of formerly all white institutions, one might be less concerned. Ironically, however, the collapse of black schools and cutbacks in tenure-stream positions for young black faculty are occurring precisely at a time when white colleges are reducing their overall numbers of black professors and administrators. At Princeton University, for instance, officials asserted recently that they have made "a vigorous effort to recruit black faculty members." In 1974, however, the number of black Princeton professors was 10, and today the figure has dropped to nine. By way of contrast, the number of women faculty at Princeton in the past decade has increased from 54 to 101.

Similar statistics can be cited across the country At Harvard University in 1980 there were 34 black professors out of 1,746 faculty, in the spring of 1984, the number of black professors had declined to 24, about 1.4 percent of the total faculty. At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the black faculty total only two percent; Cornell University, 1.7 percent; Stanford University, 1.6 percent. White administrators are quick to justify these small numbers of Afro-American faculty as a product of the relatively small pool of blacks who earn advanced degrees. But since 1974, the overall proportion of blacks receiving doctorates has risen from 3.7 to 4.4 percent. In 1982, the proportion of all minorities receiving doctorates in the field of psychology was eight percent, mathematics, nine percent, education, 14.5 percent, economics, 13.4 percent political science, 12 percent; and sociology, 10.7 percent. Even after factoring out Hispanics, Asians and other people of color, these figures indicate that the majority of white universities are making few sincere efforts to hire black graduates. Consequently, the survival of traditional black colleges is of paramount importance to thousands of young black teachers and administrators, who have few avenues of employment outside these

The proverbial bottom line of the Reaganites' educational policies is simply this: higher education is not a democratic right for the poor, blacks, Latinos and other historically oppressed groups. This political message is translated by many white universities into a silent repudation of affirmative action hiring policies. Both the current administration and many white college presidents might do well to reconsider the observations of black scholar W. F. B. DuBois. "Human culture in its broadest and finest sense can never be wholly the product of a few. There is no natural aristocracy of man. A system, therefore, of national education which tries to confine its benefits to preparing the few for the life of the few, dies of starvation."

Dr. Manning Marable teaches political sociology at Colgate University.

I vetoed half a dozen them, all but one. They were trying to adopt, and did ultimately adopt, an interposition resolution That's what Virginia was doing You know what interposition is? It meant that states could interpose their sovereignty against the federal government.

An old states' rights

The ultimate states' rights issue. I said this resolution is absurd. It's a fraud. I couldn't veto it. But I wrote on the face of it. "This thing has come across my desk as governor. I have no power to veto it or I would. It's going to be on file at the Secretary of State's offsee. And I want any student down through the years who comes and looks at it to know that the governor did not approve any such indiculous thing as this."

I'll have to go look at that.

Well, now see I can get off down any of these trails and go on-

This question might seem off the trail but do you ever read l'aukknet? He wrote a fair amount about segregation versus integration. He felt that integration could only be achieved gradually but that Southerners had the best chance of anybody in the country of implementing it peacefully because they had all grown up with black people. Was that a widespread southern attitude?

No, no I don't think so. That feeling-of course it's totally different now-that a person is inferior because he's black-some people still think that I guess it's so entrenched. But generally now the attitude of the public is one of openness and one of friendliness. I've just come from a prayer session down at the Civic Center and there were black people there and white people there. Oh there's so much progress been made since those days. But the Civil War really should have settled this. These movements should have been done then. But there were several generations that just turned their backs on the problem. It became my generation's responsibility to move and your generation's responsibility to accept and cement these changes. It's been the real action and passion of my time and I'm glad I've been involved in it. It was Oliver Wendell Holmes who said a political leader who doesn't come to grips with the actions and passions of his time does so at the risk of not having lived

How do you think your involvement affected your career?
After I was governor I went to the broadcasters and was for three years outside of government. Then President Johnson asked me to accept appointment as director of the Community Relations Service under the Civil Rights Act. He had talked to a great many people around who said I was a logical one to give that leadership to. I was a Southerner by origin and service, a former governor, but at the same time I had a reasonable outlook for progress in the future. I went all over the country with a group of young people, very fine people, black and white. And it will never be known what value we might have had because it was provided in the law that nothing we did could be publicized. They put a gag rule on us. We couldn't make reports on what we did. It's part of the Southern hostility towards the Civil Rights Act.

We were involved deeply in a number of disputes and settlements. One of the most notorious was at Selma. There were ten thousand demonstrators marching to go across a bridge. And the troops of the state, the county, the cits, all sitting over there with guns on the other side. We worked out with Dr. King.—Martin Luther King.—a settlement, a compromise. I got him to agree that if I could get the state to let them march over the bridge, which was a real big symbol, let them all come across the bridge, ten thousand of them, then Dr. King would pray and speak for twenty minutes then tell them to go back. Dr. King told me, he said. If don't think I can stop them. It was very tense, but it worked. They went back. Three days later the court issued an order enjoining any interference in the march and so they went on to Montgomery. I went with them.

If hat did you do?

Well, I worked with maxory and public authorities to protect them, to try and preserve peace. Alor of times I was talking with Dr. King right in the front lines. There were several trucks up in front of us with cameras just grinding away. I knew I'd see some of those pictures turn up at a later time. So when I got into this campaign for the Senate, all they had to do was say oh, he was at Selma. Everybody knew that because they carried a picture on the front page of the Tallahussee Democrat of me marching along with Martin Luther King. People would come up to me and say we thought you made the best governor we ever had but we sure don't want a United Stares senator who thinks like you do I'm glad, though, in retrospect, that I did everything I did.

Are there any issues in this year's legislative session that interest you?

I'm very interested in the environment, these fragile, beautiful, natural parts of our heritage are in enormous jeopardy with development pressures. I think we need some laws passed by the Legislature—I don't know what the chance may be to get them passed—like the ones to give the counties and cities expanded right of eminent domain to acquire resources and to preserve. We cannot be assured of preservation if the land can be sold to anybody who pays the bucks. Canopy roads, for example. What we need to protect those is the right for the state and other local entities to condemn development rights—that's what they call them. And that would be a strip, say, of a hundred feet on either side of these roads. We're not going to take the land away from people but we're going to take their right to destroy those trees and build some ugly thing there.

How has living in the Grove affected you?

I don't know how you relate that to tangible things, but spiritually, on my mind and my thinking, it had a strong influence. When we first acquired it, it was a tremendously difficult thing to cope with, to try and restore it, return it to the vision that Call had for it. Call had two daughters—Mary Call's grandmother was one of them and Ellen Call. Long who was the early historian and writer—she was a kind of a foretunner of the women's rights movement. Now the people who the property had been entrusted to down the years were all poor. They had to sell off land and the good furniture. Bit by bit the Grove was eroded. But the old house was so strong it couldn't be destroyed. They could make an apartment out of one room and stuck bathrooms out the windows for these tourist guesis that they took in, and they had put little beaver-board partitions No aitention to the vard at all it was wild, brambles. There were quite a few substantial people here who wanted to get it. We wanted to get it but our means were very limited. We lived in the other house Mary Call's grandmother had just across from where Rainey Cawthon's filling station is now. It was another one of those houses which should never have been destroyed. And we were responsible. But I talked to Mr. Ford (the banker who by then owned the Grove in heu of a debt) and Mary Call talked to him and we convinced him that anybody who loved the house - we wanted to keep it in the family - would care for it better. And he agreed. He was quite impressed I think with Mary Call, her sincerity and her personality. You see, her mother was born there and her grandmother was born there It's been a struggle. We've got the whole yard in very good shape—you ought to go look—it's like a park. It's expensive to keep it up. I can't mow all that grass-

The house really has been tied up with your life

It's you get the feeling of the history of it. Call and the vision that he had for this territory. He bought his land right next to the tract of land for the Capitol. There's a romantic stors you've probably heard. His wife, the first Mais Call, was the daughter of a wealthy widow in Nashville. Her mother wouldn't allow the marriage because he wanted to come down here and build that house in the wilderness. So they eloped and they were such friends of the Jacksons - they were married at the Hermitage. They came down here and had a horrible time. He built a little shants house they lived in while the big house was being built They had six children-four of them died. The house wasn't even finished when the first Mary Call died. But Call gave so much of himself in his love for this area. He was misguided in a sense that he spent a great part of his time fighting Seminole Indians-we know that wasn't such a good thing-but he was trying to make this a liveable place. But he wanted that house, he wanted to prove to his mother in law that there could be something beautiful down here

Of course, all of Jackson's people were strong Union men-So when the Calhoun period came, at the beginning of the Civil War, there was some conflict. The delegates left the convention place and went out to the Grove and stood in front there where we come and go every day and gathered around the door. And they taunted him and told him to come out. He went out. He stood there on the porch and looked right at them. And they said we just wanted you to be the first to know—"Florida is no longer a part of the United States. It is a part of the Confederate States now. We wanted to see what you'r reaction was." He said, "My reaction is that you've just opened the gates of hell."

Defense budget hides as much as it reveals about administration's true nuclear spending

BY MICHAEL I. KLARE

The United States will spend $31.6 billion on strategic nuclear forces in the coming fiscal year, according to the Department of Defense—approximately 10 percent of the proposed military budget. Adding the $7.3 billion which the Department of Energy will spend on producing nuclear warheads, we see that $38.9 billion is the total U.S. nuclear arms budget. Right?

Wrone

The fact is, Pentagon budget documents conceal much of the nation's arms spending, and when these hidden costs are added in, the total comes to $72.6 billion—double the official figure.

How do we find the missing half?

To itemize fully the nation's nuclear arms budget, we must first examine the 10 basic "mission programs" in which U.S. military capabilities are divided. These include

 Strategic Forces, all nuclear arms aimed at the Soviet Union or intended for defense against Soviet nuclear strikes

- General Purpose Forces, the umbrella term for all other front line combat components
- Research and Development (R and D)
- Intelligence and Communications
- · Airlift and Sealift
- National Guard and Reserve.
- Support, including such categories as training, maintenance and administration

Although it might seem that only the "strategic forces" mission entails nuclear responsibilities, the fact is that all 10 involve at least some nuclear component

Much of the R and D budget, for instance, is allocated to the development of new nuclear systems, such as the "stealth" bomber and the proposed "Star Wars" defenses.

Similarly, a large share of the Intelligence and Communications budget is devoted to strategic command, control and communications—the electronic infrastructure of nuclear war.

Even the supposedly non-nuclear General Purpose Forces have a large variety of nuclear missions, including use of "tactical" and "theater" atomic munitions, such as the Pershing II missiles recently deployed in Europe.

To tally accurately the nation's nuclear investment, therefore, it is necessary to allocate a certain percentage of these other expenditures to the nuclear column.

Calculation of these percentages, by necessity, must involve some degree of estimation, since the Pentagon does not identify the nuclear components of the mission categories. Nevertheless, by aggregating the nuclear related activities in each category, one arrives at these additions to the nuclear account.

• 30 percent of the fiscal 1985 R and D budget, or $8.1 billion

- 40 percent of Intelligence and Communications, $10.3 billion
- 5 percent of General Purpose Forces, $6.2 billion.
- 10 percent of support categories, $9.1 billion

Adding these amounts to the $38.9 billion allocated to Strategic Forces and warhead production, we arrive at the total 1985 figure of $76.6 billion—which is 20 percent greater than the comparable 1984 figure.

At the very least, these figures tell us that we're spending a lot more for nuclear weapons and forces than our officials are ordinarily willing to concede.

That in itself is cause for concern—But these figures also hint at something far more ominous. While talking publicly of its commitment to arms control, the Reagan administration actually is engaging in the wholesale nuclearization of U.S. combat forces.

U.S. war plans always have assumed that in the event of an all-out war with the Soviet Union, U.S. forces would be compelled to employ short range "tactical" nuclear weapons to overcome the enemy" superior numbers. As a result, various U.S. combat systems—artillery pieces, fighter aircraft, naval missiles and so forth—are capable of delivering nuclear munitions.

Under the Reagan program, however, the number of such "nuclear capable" sytems is being greatly expanded and a variety of new nuclear warheads put into production

This expansion will affect all four military services. Thus, the Marine Corps will double its inventory of nuclear-capable aircraft and triple its inventory of nuclear-capable artillery. The Army also is acquiring more such artillery, and the Air Force more such aircraft. The Navy will embark upon a truly unprecedented expansion of its nuclear war fighting capabilities as it begins to deploy some 1,000 nuclear-airmed "Tomahawk" missiles on selected U.S. submarines and surface ships.

In addition, the armed services also are introducing a nuclear emphasis in training and war games. "We have revamped our training command in order to teach our people how to think nuclear," Admiral Powell Carter told the Senate Armed Services Committee recently. "We are extending to where all of our war exercises are into a nuclear phase."

New U.S. combat tactics, such as those envisioned by the Army's "Airland Battle Concept," also place greater emphasis on combat with nuclear munitions. Given the Warsaw Pact's superiority in numbers, the ABC concept paper notes that the United States "must be able to deliver conventional and/or nuclear fires throughout the depth of the battlefield."

What explains this new emphasis on nuclear combat? To some extent, of course, it is a response to the growing nuclearization of the Soviet military—reflecting, in turn, the original nuclearization of U.S. forces in the 1950s and 60s. It also reflects the growing availability of compact nuclear warheads, allowing the production of nuclear ammunition for almost any type of gun or missile.

But there is a more critical factor at work—the Reagan administration's commitment to nuclear "war-fighting" as distinct from nuclear "deterrence."

Under a deterrence model, U.S. nuclear forces need only be powerful enough to threaten instantaneous and crippling retaliation against any nation that attacked the United States or its closest allies. But while the administration has not formally repudiated this model, it has adopted a policy requiring U.S. nuclear forces to be able to "prevail" over the Soviet Union in a "protracted" nuclear war.

According to this plan, first unveiled in the Pentagon's "Defense Guidance" document for 1984-88, U.S. nuclear forces not only would be used to retaliate, but also to destroy specific enemy capabilities in a prolonged, fight-to-the-finish nuclear war.

It is this transition to a war-fighting strategy, more than anything else, that explains the growing nuclearization of the U.S. military—and the large increase in nuclear spending

Man claims 'simple life' trick to evading taxes

1 SHID PRISO INTERNATIONAL

ST LOUIS - While millions of Americans render unto the Internal Revenue Service every year, Amos W. Bruce smiles and pays nothing

The trick is to ignore them, work only for cash and don't own anything," says Bruce, who celebrates each April 15 by burning a 1040 form in front of the Federal Reserve Bank

Bruce claims he hasn't forked over a dime to the IRS in 14 years. He calls himself." The freest person in the world."

Bruce, 59, doesn't hide the fact that he ignores the country's tax laws. In fact, he brags about it in lectures to groups and television audiences on how to dodge the tax

The IRS is well aware of Bruce, a cab driver with a checkered past that includes convictions for several crimes It has filed lins claiming Bruce owes $51,000 in back taxes. penalties and interest

But the bill goes uncollected, and Bruce says he never will

"Since the government gets everything from nothing by usurping the power to create a legal tender, they need nothing from the citizens," says Bruce, who was a selfproclaimed expert safecracker before diverting his energies to exposing the "fraud" of the U.S. monetary system.

Bruce says he does not own his cab and how much he earns is "none of your damned business." His wife owns their home. He holds no credit cards and has no bank

The IRS says Bruce walks free largely because he is small potatoes - and apparently lives a frugal life.

"If a person is skillful enough to leave no trail we can follow and has no assets, we cannot take him to court, said Robert LeBaude, St. Louis district director for the IRS

"It has to be a very penny-pinching kind of life, without any of the things in our society - vacations, credit cards that would get you into trouble," LeBaude sais "If you call that winning, I guess he has."

LeBaude was able to discuss the case because Bruce signed a waiver so he could appear on a local television talk show Normally, LeBaube could say nothing about a taxpayer's case Theoretically, I could put resources on him, follow him around town and question every one of his customers, LeBaube said "But he is just not big enough. We don't want to waste your tax dollars and mine on something like that

Bruce, a Kansas City native with a fourth grade education, quotes from the Constitution and cites legal cases in a spirited lecture that is a mixture of monetary theory and rebellion. He delights in saving more than his audiences can absorb

Bruce says the dollar, which a sign on his cab meter calls "units of monetized debt," is worthless. He says the federal government went beyond its powers in creating the Federal Reserve System and in printing dollars not backed by precious metals

Therefore, he says, citizens don't need to pay income

Although Bruce shows disdain for the dollar, he requires them in payment from his customers

"That way I can perpetuate the fraud and obtain goods and services," he explains

But Bruce says he is not a tax protestor, and does not hold himself up as a model for anyone

"I am a very nefamous character," Bruce says. "I am the most selfish man in the world. I don't give a damn about this country. If the Russians took over today, I wouldn't

"I believe this country has become morally degenerate, but I'm not the one to lead us out of it

Much of Bruce's motive is to get back at the government. He freely admits that he bootlegged untaxed cigarettes. broke into taverns and robbed a Post Office, but he holds a strong grudge anyway for the jail terms he has served.

"All the time I was in jail, they only made me worse," he says. "It's my aim in life to give them as much torment as I possibly can."

Diplomat investigated for terror campaign

I NITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

MIAMI- Haiti's top diplomat in Florida has been linked to a campaign of terror against Hait an activists here involving spies, arionists and a Miami cell of Haiti's dreaded secret police. The Miami Herald said Sunday

But Alexandre Paul, Haur's Counsel General in Miami, denied the allegations, saving. I'm not involved in these things. I don't think it's true. I don't need to dirty my

The Dade County state attorney's office is conducting an investigation into Paul based on allegations from informants who say they were hired by the diplomat to harass opponents of the tight wing regime of Haltian President for Life Jean Charle Duvalier

We have evidence that indicates Alexandre Paul has retained individuals and paid them to commit espionage and terrorist acts," said Thomas Petersen, chief assistant state attorney.

Based on interviews with unidentified informants, the Herald said the primary targets of the campaign in south Florida are members of the Parti Populaire National Haitien, a group that expouses the violent overthrow of the Duvalier regime

Miami based leaders of the PPNH organized the ill fated January 1982 invasion of Haiti But Arthur Papillon. businessman in Miami's Little Haiti section, said the PPNH is now "strong and organized" with 1,000 members

The Herald said Paul was assigned to Miami in April 1982 - after the failed assault, replacing Fritz Villain

The informants told the newspaper that Paul was given funds and carte blanche by his boss, Minister of the Interior Roger Lafontant, to keep the lid on summering anti-Duvalier sentiment among the new and predominantly poor Haitian refugees settling in south Florida

He does so by letting it be known "he is not afraid to hurt ansone," the informants told the Heruld

He is aided by a Miami cell of Haiti's dreaded police, the Tontons Macoutes Paul commissioned Macoute agents to carry out robbenes and set fires in Little Haiti's business community, sources told the Heriad

In addition, the sources linked Paul to the Nov. 3, 1982 firebombing of the headquarters of the Haitian American Community Association of Dade and to a plan to kidnap HACAD's director, Henry Marcellus, a radio personality who often mocks Duvalier's wife on the air

Paul also hires spies to inform him of the whereabouts of opponents at all times, informants charged

"Paul pays cash. He deals with only one person at once, nobody else around. But everybody knows what's going on," an informant said

U.S. Customs officials told the Herald they see no breach of federal neutrality laws in the allegations against Paul

Town marvels at giant cube

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

BELLE GLADE-A 911-ton block of raw brown sugar, billed as the world's largest sugar cube, was unveiled as the farming community of Belle Glade wrapped up its annual harvest jubilee

The celebration, which ended Sunday, heralds the spring harvest of trainloads of vegetables and 12.8 million tons of sugar cane, cut from the 700,000 acres of muckland surrounding Belle Glade.

Residents feared the 7 foot-tall block couldn't be built from raw sugar, which has a high molassas content that makes it difficult to stick together

Myra McCroen said her husband Ernie, chairman of the jubilee committee, worried a lot about the colossal cube crumbling

"He had nightmare about it falling apart," Myra McCroen said.

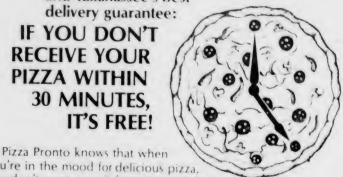

Determined to out-do last year's jubilee centerpiece, a 29-ton vegetable salad, community engineers pondered three models for constructing the cube before choosing plywood-like sheets glued together with clear syrup. The final product could sweeten almost 2 million cups of coffee

"It's something else, it really is," marveled cane grower Gary Crews. "Now they'll have to come up with a coffee pot next year to go with it."

Girls marching their way to the top in high school ROTC

BY LOUIS FREEDBERG

OAKLAND, Calif — The neatly painted blue and white sign on the door reads, "Cadet Colonel Colar, Brigade Commander!"

Inside, Jade Colar, the 17-year-old brigade commander of McClymonds. High School's Reserve Officers' Training Corps, dispenses advice to other female cades. In the accignound, there is the din of students practicing parade formations or improving their skills on the rifle range.

Colar is the highest-ranking student among 950 ROTC cadets in Oakland's high schools. Along with other girls across the country, she is breaking down barriers in an unexpected area.

Ten years ago, girls were not even allowed to enroll in ROTC programs on high school campuses. Now they are signing up in droves for this volunteer program, which allows students school credit for activities ranging, from learning first aid and map-reading skills to participating in parades.

Nationally, girls now make up one-third of all ROTC enrollments in large cities, their participation has been even more impressive, accounting for nearly half of those enrolled in some cities, like Detroit and Chicago, girls actually outnumber boys.

I ven more significant, girls like Jade Colar have marched right past their male counterparts and now dominate the top ROTC leadership positions in many school districts. In Oakland, five of the 6x highest ranking students are girls.

All this is part of a dramatic turnaround from the early 1970s, when many ROTC programs were threatened with extinction because of a lack of students, or were under attack for being too militaristic or not academically relevant

Today, high school ROTC is booming — at a record 127,000 students, up 16,000 in the past year alone — thanks in large part to the participation of girls.

The program also has benefited from the decline in local school funding. School districts have gratefully hung on to these programs, which are funded mostly by the Army. And for students, ROTC has filled the gap left by cutbacks in electives and extracurricular activities.

Interviews with ROTC officials, teachers and counselors reveal no single explanation for the dramatic increase in girl participants.

All do agree that it does not reflect any patriotic surge Rather, they see the girls attracted by the more glamorous, public aspects of the program. Particularly for minority girls, who make up most ROTC entrollees in urban areas, the program seems to provide feelings of accomplishment and pride. "They get out in the public eye like men." says instructor May. Columbus Bryant.

One of those in the public eye is Kim Henderson, 18, who admits that the drill team first caught her eye in the ninth grade. Now a senior, she is commander of the coed drill

Hers is so casual involvement Each day she usually spends an hour before school, part of her lunch break, fifth and sixth periods, and an hour after school in ROTC activities. Numericus ribbons pinned to her uniform testify to her declaration.

"Once you get in, you get that motivation," she says

The social aspects of the program are also important "It's a groupse thing, a club thing," says Valerie Taylor, who directs an American Friends Service Committee counseling program at a San Francisco high school "They see it as from".

And ROTC provides a place where girls can rise to the top of the ladder without fear of alienating boys. "It's the one place where there isn't discrimination against them," says Tastor.

So many girls are in leadership positions, counselors and ROTC officials agree, because they adjust more readily to the street military regime. "They're more eager to learn, more teachable, and more manageable than boys," says Oakland counselor Eduardo Barranco. Most girls involved do not intend to pursue a military career—only a fraction sign up for college ROTC programs or enlist for active duty. This is true even of those who have reached the top. Jade Colar says she might sign up for an Arms reserve program, but that will be it. "I don't want to be isolated from the civilian world," she says.

Across town at Fremont High School, Battalion Commander Stephanie Ashlev, 18, her uniform impressively arrayed with rows of badges and ribbons, agrees emphatically "Once I'm out of high school, that's it with the Arms."

The Army is prohibited from using ROTC as a recruiting device and its instructors — retired Army officers — say they do not try to push their students into a military career. But Col. Harold Lee, head of San Francisco's ROTC program, concedes, "If you expose kids to the military, they may have an inkling to consider the Army in the future." Military recruiters talk to ROTC classes frequently.

The real impact of ROTC involvement may be felt far from a military arena. Girls in top positions are convinced they can successfully challenge sex stereotyping in the job market. Colar, for example, plans to be a neuropsychiatrist and Ashley wants to become a surgeon — ambitious goals for students from inner-city schools.

"ROTC gave me a lot of self-confidence that I can do it just as well as guys can," says Ashley, "Now I know I can connecte with ears."

Not that the girls have risen to the top without resistance. Colar says boys tease her with questions like, "Are you going to make your children eat at attention?" Others are more blunt "The military isn't for women," they say.

And Colar must deal with male students who don't obey her orders. The standard punishment is to do pushups — and if they resist, Colar demotes them: "Later they'll come and apologize and ask to be reinstated," she says.

Says Colar, "Males have to get used to females moving up. Theo're making things happen."

No truce likely in Washington war

WASHINGTON-Three months into the election-year session, Congress and President Reagan are at war. There is no truce in sight

The confrontation, increasingly hostile, has engulfed virtually every issue facing Congress as the elections draw increasingly near.

And not since he took office, a little more than three years ago, has Reagan been in so much trouble on Capitol Hill

Topping off the troubles, the conflict between the Republican ruled Senate and the Democrat-controlled House contributes to the paralysis

As a result, Congress, off on a week's Easter vacation, has little to show in the way of legislation with expectations that not much will be done before next year.

In one key area, however, Congress has started moving. with the Senate and House each approving nearly $50 billion in deficit reductions over the next three years. The cuts come in the form of increased taxes through the curbing of "loopholes" and other tinkering with the tax code

In addition, the House has passed a fiscal 1985 budget that includes a plan to cut the deficit by $182 billion.

And the Senate Budget Committee narrowly adopted a Republican-backed budget, which faces a stiff floor fight. It includes a $150 billion three-year deficit cut and has the backing of Reagan

In both cases, the tax package will provide about $50 billion of the deficit cut but the rest will have to come from spending reductions with which Congress has not dealt

Congress has a long way to go before the fiscal 1985 budget and the deficit reductions are in place. No matter , what the final form, the budget is going to mean sharp reductions in Reagan's original requests for a military

Reagan's problems are far more acute in the field of foreign policy - most notably on the issue of aid to Central America - and the debate has been highly acrimonious submitted emergency requests to Congress last month asking for $93 million in military aid to El Salvador and $21 million for the Nicaraguan rebels. A compromise plan cut that to $62 million for El Salvador and $21 million for the rebels

Speaker Thomas O'Neill said the House absolutely would not agree to the $21 million for the contras, but was willing to provide $32 million for El Salvador.

Although the dollar figures for El Salvador and for the Nicaraguan rebels ran into congressional opposition, it was the delayed acknowlegment that the CIA had mined Nicaraguan waters that touched off an uproar on Capitol

After a sharp outers, in which Republicans joined Democrats, the Senate and House passed identical, nonbinding resolutions putting Congress on record that no U.S. funds be spent on any further laying of mines in the harbors and ports of the Central American nation.

The political infighting, the confrontation over Central America and the long-running debate over the budget have dominated the first three months of the session. Little has actually been done

After months of delay, Congress approved a farm bill that imposes a "freeze" on federal subsidies to farmers, an administration goal, but also gives farmers early cash payments for not growing wheat, corn, cotton and rice in 1985 and liberalizes terms for farm loans

The Senate killed, probably for this year, a proposed constitutional amendment permitting spoken prayer in public schools. The House is not expected to take any action.

The Senate also approved major revisions in federal crime laws, including the imposition of the death penalty and stiffer penalties for career criminals. Here again, the House

Congress easily overrode Reagan's veto of a bill that will provide $36 million for water resources research. Congress has now overriden four of 28 vetoes

Casev: Worry about immigrants, not about the CIA mines

WASHINGTON - CIA Director William Cases said Sunday a "massive wave of immigration" spurred by communist takeovers in Central America would excite Americans a lot more than any qualms about mining No aragua's harbors

Cases, in an interview in U.S. News and World Report. also said he does not believe the U.S.-backed "Contras" will be able to unseat Nicaragua's leftist government, but they are "creating a great deal of disarray

The magazine said Casev refused to discuss the mining reportedly directed by the CIA, but offered this view of the stakes in the superpower struggle over Central

"If we have another Cuba in Central America, Mexico will have a big problem and we're going to have a massive wave of immigration. The effort to prevent this happening is not going to excite Americans as much as the threat they would face it things go wrong

Cases also said the United States would face a greater military threat if the communists solidify their hold on Nicaragua "The communists would next be looking to Mexico," he warned

"What you're looking at for your children is the long term prospect of 100 million hostile people immediatels south of our border " he said

While Cases said the Contras are diverting the "Sandinsta leaders from supporting the insurgency in El Salvador" and increasing the pressure for a more peaceful solution," the rebels are "not going to overthrow that government

Record companies are saving we could be entering the second age of the teens bopper. For the first time in 15 years, soung girls are crowding the record stores. That could have a big effect on who makes the top 40 young girls are turned off by heavy metal. They like more pop-oriented bands like Menudo or Duran Duran

The '60s may be gone, but alternative schools are still with us. In fact, they're thriving. A national survey found more than 10,000 alternative schools in operation today, up from only a 100 back in 1970. They come in many different styles, from back-to-basics to array-craftsy, but they share several common characteristics: classes are smaller, parents are more involved and teachers have more say in establishing policy. Says one educator, "Alternative schools are not the lonely anachronisms that some have thought."

Curtis Thomas (44) of the Garnet squad gets hauled to earth by the Gold defense

Garnet and Gold game leaves Bowden confused

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS

Bobby Bowden sat in the stands, staring with a dazed look at the action down on the playing field. Surrounded by reporters during the annual Horida State Garnet and game, Bowden was rather complacent, not really sure what to make of the Gold's 48-24 victory

"It's hard to sit here and look at that scoreboard and give you an accurate analysis," Bowden said. "I had no idea it would be this way. I want to go back to bed." Bowden was still battling a cold and was obstously tired

To be sure, the intrasquad game that capped off this year's spring practice was pretty confusing, not unlike spring games of the past. Instead of dividing the squadup equally. Bowden decided this year to run his first unit offense against his second unit defense, and his first unit defense against his second unit offense. Hence, the rather lopsided score

"I really don't know how to evaluate this game," said Bowden, scratching his head 'This is one of those utuations where we'll have to look at the films and find why one play happened, or why one didn't

One thing Bowden could tell about the game was that junior quarterback Kirk Coker continued to impress him with his play this spring. A walk-on transfer from Alabama State, Coker came out of nowhere this spring when first-string quarterback Fric Thomas fell in the early days with a knee injury. As quickly as Thomas got injured. Coker became the number one quarterback, partly due to his familiarity with the option, one of Bowden's pet projects this year.

Though he didn't particularly run the option well Saturday, Coker did complete seven of 14 passes for 119 yards and three touchdowns, including a 48-yard TD strike to Hassan Jones in the fourth quarter

"I thought he did a good job today," Bowden said. "Today was just icing on the cake for him. Eric Thomas is definitely gonna have his work cut out for him in the

Another quarterback who caught Bowden's eye was freshman Danny McManus of Hollywood A freshman redshirt last year, McManus got no higher than third string during practice because of his inability to run the option adequately But on a day when nobody really ran the option well, McManus showed off his throwing ability by completing nine of 17 passes for 129 yards and one touchdown while backing up second-unit QB hob "I was very surprised I did that well," McManus said in the lockerroom. "Coach Lason told me at halftime that we were going to throw on about every down, so all I'd have to do is sit back there and throw the ball "

Assistant head coach Art Baker, who coached the Garnet team, was also pleased with McManus' performance played better in the game than in the whole practice," Baker said. "He threw very well under pressure today, and you've got to admire that '

The passing of Coker and McManus overshadowed the Seminole's strong desire to improve their option attack during spring drills. Going into the 20-day session, Bowden stressed the importance of the option in the team's offense this fall. After Saturday's game, however, he was not so enthusiastic. "We're not gonna live or die by the option It's just a part of our offensive game plan," he explained.

"We believe in the pass here at Florida "There may be State," Baker added games where we use the option more than the pass. It depends on what their defense gives you "

On Saturday, the Seminoles' defense gave up a lot. Against the second-unit defense, the Gold offense rolled up and down the field Recovering a Garnet fumble on the opening series, the Gold drove 16 yards in four plays with Coker hitting Jesse Hester for a seven-yard touchdown pass. Freshman walk on placekicker Sam Zighelboim added the extra point, giving he Gold an early 7-0 lead

Getting the ball back, the Garnet lost it just as quickly hen Otis Moore fumbled on the Garnet 33 yard line Grald Nichols recovered on the 36.

Coker then stepped in and calmly tossed a 36-yard touchdown to Hassan Jones - Zighelboim's kick was good, making the score 14-0 for the Gold

Once again, however, the Garnet couldn't get a first down, so both squads began trading series until 5 30 left in the first quarter when Darrin Holloman scored on a four ward run

The Garnet offense was not through fumbling, though, as fullback Lenny Sutton dropped the ball after an impressive 19 yard run. Sieve Bloodworth recovered for the Gold on the Carnet's 48 In an instant replay, Coker hit Jones over the middle for a 48 yard touchdown

The Carnet finally got on the scoreboard when another freshman walk-on placekicker, Mark Lively, connected on 24-yard field goal

Holloman capped off the scoring in the first half with a two-yard run in the second quarter, making the halftime core 35-3 for the Gold.

McManus took over for the Garnet in the second half, and not a moment too soon. Davis' stats for the first half showed him completing only five of 20 passes for 71 yards and four interceptions

McManus fared much better, though, leading the Garnet on a touchdown drive on its second series. On that drive, McManus completed three of five passes. Sutton did the dirty work, scoring on a nine-yard run.

The lone touchdown pass for McManus was a thriller; a 70-yard pop to Hester in the fourth quarter.

Holy homers! It's batgirl

FSU Batgirls. You've watched them chase foul balls. You've seen them lug bats. You've lived the drama of the scoreboard with them. Now listen to them

DKR How do you get to be a buigirl?

Cheryl (she has honey-colored hair and a buttermilk completion) Well, you go to their meeting and they tell you the whole spiel. You take a baseball quiz and you have to go through interviews - or so they say, a big five

And how do you support the team?

Oh, just small ways We do little things for the players like where they have secret pals - the girls kind of adopt a baseball player and they find out who they are during Metro You know, they just do little things for them.

D.K. ROBERTS

Wendy's t shirts, the ugliest t shirts in the Western Hemisphere, to be worn. But then, there's Rhonda who has chocolate-colored hair and a kalhua and cream complexion

What do you like about being a batgirl?

I was a batgirl in high school so I decided to try out and I like everything about it

What do they ask you in your batgirl interview?

Why you want to be a batgirl and what makes you think you're qualified - things like that It lasts maybe two

Are there a lot of batgirls in sorontes?

Yeah, oh yeah lots

What's your main duty as a bargirt?

There's, like, seven jobs. Sell programs in the stands, sell programs downstairs, you're in - get the bats, you're on right and if the balls go in right field you go and get them, go in left field and get them, visitors, same thing, and scoreboard. It's the most difficult and no one wants to do it. You know why? Because whenever you do something wrong - have you been to baseball games? - everyone screams "Score board!" as loud as they can - "SCORE

Here a blonde batgirl comes up (not Chervl) who says to Rhonda Did you bring a jacket? Can I borrow it? Do you see what I have to wear? (she holds up the unspeakable Wendy's t-shirt)

How do you feel when they're velling "score board" at

It's the worst feeling in the world? 'Cause they can see you too, they know who you are It's bad, it's bad news

How do the guys on the team treat you?

Real nice. We do a lot for them and they appreciate it. It's real good. Like, last night a lot of Miami guys went out with our guys to Big Daddy's and it was real fun. Oh but the fans - wait till you hear what they do to this guy. There's this one guy on the Miami team who is really, really fat. And they're going to scream "Shamu" when he gets up to bat. It's really sad

What do you think of the fans?

Hove 'em!

What do you think of Mongo?

I think it's great that someone goes out there and brings the crowd up. They go crazy when he does that stuff.

Have you ever talked to him? Does he talk?

Here comes the balgirl sponsor. She says: They need help. Rhonda says. This is D.K. Roberts — you don't understand. - But the sponsor says its desperate downstairs and every batgirl is needed. So Rhonda goes to work, and it's time to play ball.

Gunslingers shoot down Bulls 20-0

I SITIOPRISSISTIES ATIONAL

JACKSONVII I F-The San Antonio Gunslingers put their best game of a 2.6 USFL season together to shut out the Jacksonville Bulls 20-0 but the hapless Bulls deserve a good deal of the credit for the Cunslingers' win

The Gunslingers scored their most points ever in the Saturday battle between two expansion clubs, starting off the evening with Scott Stamper's 26-yard scoring run in the first quarter

"We had a team meeting earlier this week and decided the defense has been carrying us," Stamper said. "It's time (the offense) did something

And the pepped up Gunslinger offense did its job Saturday, but it was aided by costly errors on the part of Bulls' quarterback Robbie Mahfour

"Hang it on me." Mahfouz said after the game. "I did thot play and this may be the biggest understatement of the year - particularly well

Mahfouz lost two fumbles, the first one at the San Antonio 20-vard line in the third quarter. Gunslingers Quarterback Rich Neuheisel then led an 80-yard drive that ended with his one-yard woring plunge for a 17-0 score

Mahfouz fumbled a snap on the next Bulls possession at his own 26-yard line with San Antonio's Rich D'Amico recovering. The Gunslingers were unable to advance but Nick Mike Mayer kicked a 45 yard field goal to make the score 20-0 with 14-40 left to play

Mike Mayer also kicked a 48-yard field goal with four seconds left in the first half to make the score 10-0 after Mahfouz threw an interception to the Gunslingers' Larry

Despite the Bulls' disastrous turnovers, Gunslingers' coach Cil Steinke was giving his team all the credit for the

"It's real satisfying when you put a complete game together and when you come into enemy territory and play as well as we did," Steinke said. "Lets hope this is an

Meuheisel said San Antonio's new found ability to avoid critical mistakes also was a key part of the win

"We've been beating ourselves before," he said "Tonight we eliminated those mistakes"

The Jacksonville Bulls, no doubt, were wishing they had

Bandits-Breakers tonight

LNITED PRINCIPLES ATTORNAL

NEW ORLEANS - No coach in his right mind would bet his life on predicting a win or a loss, but both Dick Coury and Steve Spurrier feel confident predicting their game will look just a little bit insane.

Coury's New Orleans Breakers meet Spurrier's Tampa Bay Bandits Monday at 9 p.m. in the Louisiana Superdome. The coaches agree the sheer newness of the USFI, helps them take chances a more established league would never tolerate

"Those NIT guys have a lot of pressure on them," said

"If they were to use some of the plays we do and have them backfire on them, the writers would say, 'Look at those guvs. How stupid. But if you make a play part of your regular offense like we do, it's not like your winning with trickery

For Coury and his Breakers, winning has not been so much through trickery as through imagination verging on absurdity. The New Orleans coach has even invited fans to submit any play that pops into their heads, promising to try it out if it doesn't sound illegal, immoral or fattening

With the Breakers 6-1 behind John Walton's passing and running by Marcus Dupree and Buford Jordan, no one gets angry if a play looks weird now and again

Therapy doesn't always work.

Seminoles edge Hurricanes in extra innings

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS FLAMBEAL STAFF WRITER

For 56 games, Florida State first baseman lommy Zoeller has been sitting on the bench, unable to play because of a wrist 10 1137 V

Sunday afternoon, Zoeller finally got his chance to play, and he made the most of it Finch-hitting for Vince Insogna, Zoeller hit a 3.2 pitch deep to right field in the bottom of the 11th inning to score Alan Gentry from o'ed, giving FSU a 54 victory over Miami The victory allowed FSU to take two of three simes from Miami in a series that was crucial for both teams and upped FSU's record to

"We had been trying to redshirt Tommy tils year, but we felt we needed him in this same," FSU head coach Mike Martin said alterward. "Our associate athletic director (3ob Goin) came down to the dugout and told me if he bats, he loses his eligibility, I und 'He bats'

Zoeller said "I didn't have enough time to let it cross my mind. I was just trying to push the ball as far into the outfield as possible '

Zoeller had the right strategy, for after the Seminoles loaded the bases, Miami head coach Ron Fraser sent in an extra infielder to replace left fielder Phil Lane "What we were trying to do was fill any gaps in the infield," Fraser explained

"It was a smart play to do," Martin said "We have something like it."

Nobody could have asked for more drama in the game, which saw both teams hitting the ball well, though they were also unable at times to bring anybody in. As is usual for FSU, eight runners were stranded on base Miami left four on base "We've been having that problem all year," Martin said "But at least we didn't leave them on in the bottom of the 11th

Miami started the scoring immediately, picking up a run in the first inning when Darren Mandel drove a fly ball deep to left, scoring Kevin Carter

FSU bounced back in the fourth when Drew Kosco pumped a three-run homer over the right-center wall, putting the Seminoles

Miami came right back in the sixth inning when Doug Shields cranked a leadoff home run. Two outs later, Mandel sent a fastball over the left field wall. At this point, Martin vanked starting pitcher Ray Revak and replaced him with Loren Levy, Lane then stepped up and got on base with a single, and later scored on a single by Julio Solis, giving Miami a slim 4 3 lead

The Seminoles tied the game in the seventh on a solo homer by shortstop Jody Reed. The only opportunity in regular innings for the Seminoles came in the eighth, when Paul Sorrento singled After a Jimmy Jones strikeout, however, Vince Calandra hit into a double play

After several quiet innings, the Seminoles made then big push in the 11th, as Jones bit a double to center. Jose Marzan beat out a bunt, sending Jones to third. With runners on first and third. I raser called for an intentional walk for Calandra, filling the

Then near chaos set in as Martin replaced Jones with Genry for better speed. Fraser then pulled Lane from left field and sent in Jon Leake to fill the hole between third and shortstop. Instead of allowing Insogna to bat, Martin went with Zoeller to pinch hit Sitting on a full count, Zoeller hit a changeup to deep right, scoring Gentry

"It was a great series," Martin said. "It's great for college baseball, and it sure was a big one for us "

"It has always been a great series," agreed Fraser, whose team dropped to 31-19 on the year "It was definitely good baseball"

SERVING TALLAHASSEE FOR 71 YEARS

VOL. 71 NO. 139

Farmworkers, led by Fernando Cuevas took their case for emergency relief to Tallahassee Monday.

Farmworkers seek relief

LATTED PRINCIPIES ATRIAL

Migrant workers who lost their jobs to the devastating Christmas freeze would be eligible for special unemployment benefits under a bill approved Monday by the House Commerce Committee

The 15-5 committee vote drew cheers from several dozen blue year-clad farmworkers, who had traveled to the Capitol to lobby for the bill

The proposal (HB 831) would authorize unemployment benefits for the farm laborers, who because of the freeze weren't able to work enough weeks to qualify for normal iobless benefits

"Since the freeze, it's been getting very hard for us to get enough to eat," said Fernando Cuevas of the Farm Labor Organizing Committee. "We want to work, there's no work We desperately need it."

The legislation carries an estimated $15 million price tag for the extra unemployment checks, and could affect as many as 90,000 laborers, according to sponsor Rep. Helen Gordon-Davis, D-Tampa.

Normally, an individual must work at least 20 weeks to be eligible for unemployment benefits. But due to the severe weather in late December and January, seasonal farm workers were out of work longer than usual.

The laborers typically would work in the fields until summer, but they are already out of work

The bill temporarily lowers the required number of weeks to 12 and raises the benefit amount. The bill would apply to anyone not just farm workers—who files a claim between Sponsors wanted to restrict the bill to just farm workers in the counties hardest hit by the freeze, but could not find a method that didn't violate the U.S. Labor Department's interpretation of constitutional protections.

If special federal benefits become available, workers wouldn't be entitled to jobless benefits under the bill

Davis said the bill would have a negligible effect on Florida's $871 million unemployment compensation fund, and shouldn't affect the state's employers who pay into the fund.

Several of the committee members who voted against the bill objected to an amendment that would prohibit all Floridians from collectingunemployment benefits if they are simultaneously collecting sick pay.

Thurman Burnett of the state labor department said the amendment would only affect between 25 and 30 airline stewardesses whose contracts have a special provision allowing the "double dipping."

So was the farmworker's journey to the Capitol ultimately worth it? Karen Woodall, director of Florida IMPACT and one of the bill's major proponents definitely thinks so

"I'm sure there were several people who voted for that bill who wouldn't have if they hadn't spoken directly to the people who are affected," said Woodall. "It was a very good experience for the workers to be part of the political process—to reinforce the importance of their involvement."

Panel nixes bid to delay skills test

BY MICHAEL MOLINE

The Florida House Committee on Higher Education decided to proceed with plans to hold back state college students who flunk their College Level Academic Skills Test beginning next fall, despite predictions from black legislators and educators that the test will drive thousands of minority students out of school.

The committee also approved a measure which would make it easier for qualified state employees to enroll for free courses in the state's universities and community colleges.

The IO-8 decision to proceed with plans to begin enforcing the CLAST came over strong protests by Pep. Al Lawson, D Tallahassee, who with House Speaker Lee Moffitt, D Tampa, co-sponsored a move to delay enforcement until 1987.

"It's a matter of whether you want minorities in schools of higher education," Lawson said. "I hate to put it this was, but this is our last hope. We need the extention."

The test was designed to make sure students master their lower division course work before they proceed to the upper division. Sophomores have been taking the test sixelf and to point out to students areas in which they need more work. Beginning next fall, however, students won't be allowed to enroll in Junior, and Senior-level courses unless they have passed the test.

No complete study of the effect the test would have on black enrollment has been done, according to Sen. Carrie Meek, D Miami, who sponsored the Senate version of the bill, but when students at Miami-Dade Community College took the test in March, 1983, black students proved much more likely to fail than their white counterparts. According to Meek, 30 percent of the blacks who took the test at Miami-Dade—which has even more black students than Florida A&M University—failed, compared to a 13 percent failure rate by Hispanic students and a 12 percent overall failure rate.

Blacks are more likely to fail, Meck told the committee, because they are also more likely to be poor than are other ethnic groups, and are, therefore, less likely to find at home the motivation they need to take the high school courses necessary for survival in college. High School guidance programs, Meck said, do not fill the gap. She cited a Board of Regents study which said that "black students weren't taking preparatory courses because they had been allowed (by teachers and guidance counselors) to take eass courses."

The result. Meek said, is that 30 years after the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation, Florida still has an unequal system of education. "There has been a dual system of education in Florida and for many Florida students there is still a dual system," Meek said. She urged the committee to delay full implementation of the CLAST until remedial programs could be established to make up the gap.

We can't carry Florida forward unless we bring up the

Legislators urge women to support sex discrimination study

I NITED PRINCIPLENATION AL

I wo leading women legislators urged influential women Monday to pressure their representatives to support a sex discrimination study of Florida government jobs in the wake of a Washington sex bias ruling

Sen Carrie Meek, D-Miami, and Rep. Helen Gordon Davis, D-Tampa, said the study would show that jobs where women traditionally work are underpaid compared to jobs where men are usually hired, even though the women's jobs might be more demanding.

"Inadequate pay institutionalized, just like racism," said Meek, who sponsored an unsuccessful bill last year mandating equal pay for jobs taken mostly by women.

"The state of Florida is practicing direct, overt and institutionalized discrimination against its women workers," Meek told a conference entitled "Improving the Status of Women in Florida: Making "84 Count."

In the Washington case, a federal judge ordered the state to pay $800 million to $1 billion in back wages to women who were discriminated against.

Jocks & bikers—Session thrills

BY D.K. ROBERTS

Be true to your school trahrahrah sass beem bah)

It's Friday the 13th, the House is in session, and Representative Betty Easles wags her finger at the gallery where the reporters lurk and loiter with German microphones and gleaming tripeds and Son TV cameras saying "a clean press." That's what the Rev. who just spouted Prayer of the Day was supplicating for Why is the pointing at me."

BH442 comes up, a lump-wristed bill designed to make the academic requirement for high school students to participate in athletics fractionally more stringent. Some pious nonsense is spoken about how tough it is on the little jocks to keep up that terrifying D »

But Representative Alzo Reddick from Orlando has a mean amendment. He's got a mean speech to go with it, too. He wants to beef up the standard, make it five of seven classes that these teen dream athletes have to pass in order to throw their sweats bodies around on a secondary school playing field. He speaks of the exploitation of athletes-as long as they can slam or run that ball 4 yards every play nobody cares if they can spell k a t. He makes the point that high school (and college) athletes are taken care of as long as they compete When they stop being handy with a ball (and how many do you think make it to the pros?) they are jobless and prospectless-"look in any community and you will find the outstanding athlete of two years ago unemployed

Reddick preaches it. Half the House yells "yeah!" Big Sam Mitchell gets up like a minor earthquake to speak in support. Willie Logan speaks against—won't it hinder students now in athletics with below the average?

Bingo. However, Reddick withdraws the amendment. Half the house yells "no!" And the bill, a nonentity, passes. But Alzo Reddick says he's going to write his own bill.

Fun, fun, fun

Sam Bell sponsors Resolution 1170 commending WFSU-FM for their fine legislative coverage. What a beautiful and unusual thing for the reps to praise something of discernably higher quality

The Local Bill 500 Representative Gene Hodges, grand crab of Cedar Key, runs through the entire local bill calendar in saminutes and seventeen seconds. The whole package passes on masse in 14 seconds.

James Harold Thompson moves to adjourn. It's all of 11.15 a.m. Ron Rohmond objects. He doesn't see why he should show up on Fridays at all if he's only going to work for an hour and fifteen minutes. Speaker Miffit shrugs. James Harold withdraws the motion and the House gets down to some serious business like wishing. Fred Lippman a happy birthday. And gee, it's Peter Wallace's birthday, too. Where's the party?

Tock it up, tock it up buddy gonna shull rou down

It's Monday the 16th but it feels unlucky too. The capitol cafeteria (meeting place of the glamourous) is full of bikers in shades carrying trasy of All-American scrambled eggs, rigor-mortified bacon and biscuits with yellow paint. A she biker in garnet leather trousers and a garnet and gold t-shift with "I et Those Who Ride Decide" on the back is taking snapshots of the bikers' lawyers and lobbyists at their table. They're come to work on the hair flowing free-in-the-motorcycle wind (Zen, and the removal of helmets) bill (SB 940) again.

The King of the Bikers is named Marion Stewart, but everyone calls him Grandpa He is the opposite of scars. He has gres leather chaps and a grey leather vest Matches his grey Harley Davidson. He has a pigtail and a diamond in his left car. He says he always says "ves-ma'am" and "yes sir" He smiles "It's just the way I was raised up. I'm just an old Southern boy " I asked him who those guys roaring up on bikes in suits were. He says it's the Duval County delegation (UPtown). I say they look like lawyers. He says one of them is a lawyer. He is a truck mechanic. He is married to a teacher. He has never heard of Altamont Bikers sure ain't what they used to be But then, neither are legislators

A death warrant that would never expire. Sounds like a proposal to gladden the hearts of death penalty proponents everywhere. And that's what House Bull 105, sponsored by Corrections Committee chair James Ward, D. Fort Walton Beach, would provide—a warrant that couldn' respire before a defendant's stay of execution ran out.

But HB 105 has an important enemy - Cov. Bob Graham

On the surface, Graham seems an unlikely opponent for Ward's proposal. Death warrants in Florida currently expire in seven days, and it defense lawyers can get a state or federal court to grant a temporary stay of execution, the warrant often runs out before the stay does. That means Graham has to sign a new death warrant, and the governor has sometimes waited years to do that. Proponents of Ward's bill say it would close up a "loophole" in enforcing Florida's death penalty.

Graham doesn't oppose the "endless" death warrant because he's changing his position on the death penalty, however. Graham knows that if HB 105 passes the Legislature, it will open the door to a welter of appeals on the grounds that the new law is unconstitutional Graham is aware it could take the courts years to rule on the new law, and during that process the death penalty would be effectively suspended in Horida.

Graham doesn't want to see any change in Florida's death penalty statute for that reason

It seems Graham has decided to do whatever politically expedient thing is necessary to unclog Florida's crowded death row. Graham's press secretary, Steve Hull, said he didn't even know why the current statue provides for a seven-day expiration period on death warrants in Florida. Hull said the statute was on the books when Graham took office, and that he didn't know the legislation's history.

Whatever the legislation's history, Ward's latest proposal is unconscionable. What is ironic here is that HB 103 undoubtedly would result in a halt-albeit a temporary one—to executions in Florida while the new law stood trial in the courts.

And while Graham is doing the right thing in opposing Ward's bill, he is doing it for the wrong reasons.

In Wednesday's Fambeau (April 11), the editorial dealing with "Gay Solidariis" Awareness Week" stated plainly that homosexuality is not a sin. We would like to know where did you find your definition of sin? A. ording to Webster s, un is an offense against rel gious or moral laws a transgression of the law of God According to the laws of God homosexuality is a sin. In Leviticus 18-22 of the Old Testament, it says "Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind, it is abomination." Continuing in Levilicus 20-13, "If a man hes with a man, as a man lies with a woman, both of them have done what is detestable. They must be put to death, their own blood will be on their heads

Now, if homosexuality is righteous and not sinful, why should they be punished? Their punishment is the consequence of their sin. The New Testament also deals with the sinfulness of homosexuality. First Corinchians 7.2 states, "to avoid formeation, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband." Where does it say that a man should have a husband? Or a woman a wife? Purely and simply—it doesn't?

Finally, Jude 1.7 says, "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." As proven above, the acts of homosevuality are surful and punishable by eternal damnation.

Gays unnatural

ditor:

This is in response to the "Solidarity" editorial that was in Wednesday's Flambeau. I am astonished that the writer could make such a generalization when he noted that, "the people who now attack gay rights are the direct political descendants of the ones who told women that they were fit only to be slaves

I have never opposed women's rights, nor do I think blacks were meant to be slaves, but my opinion of homosexuals is firmly negative. Homosexuality is perveited, immoral and definitely unnatural. No matter how many times society is told by groups such as the Cay Lesbian Support Services, that there is nothing abnormal about homosexuality, that is just not the way nature meant it to be. On a positive note, I was in favor of "Lavender Wednesday." At least now, me and others who thare my opinions will know who and who not to associate with

Students of Florida State University are asking "Mr. Flambeau" questions! Do you care, Mr. Flambeau? Are you really listening? If you are, then why don't you have the journalistic guts to answer our questions? Did you know that your answers may, in turn, cause more feedback from students? Or is feedback not wanted and hence not encouraged by answering intelligent questions? Do you just want to print another issue, or is long-term improvement in your goals?

Please, please — answer our questions. Readers — don't you want readers to know the answer to J. His.ks' question on page four of the April 11 issue concerning perceived unequal justice between his "sign shaking" and the fraternity "gun incident"? We want answers, not just more words. Mr. Flambeau, do you have answers for me? And will you answer students in the future? Readers — if Mr. Flambeau does not change, please flood him with letters on this subject.

Jerry Cramer

Editor's note: The Dougherty County Sheriff's Dept., in whose jurisdiction the 'gun incident' occurred, declined to press charges. FSU's Judicial Affairs office handled the case, but is forbidden by federal law to disclose its outcome without the student's permission.

Letters Policy: Letters to the editor of the Florida Flambeau should be signed, a must include an address and phone number if possible. They should be type written, double-spaced, and no longer than 150 words. Correct names will be run with each letter unless the author has a valid reason for remaining anonymous. # Despite unitary tax, Graham says business still loves Florid

Gos Bob Graham said Monday that despite resistance to the "unitary tax" on worldwide business profits, Florida's climate for new industry ranked first in the nation for a third straight year

"What this survey does not report, because it is difficult to measure numerically, is the quality of life," Graham said at a news conference "And here is a category through which, if it were included, Florida would further lengthen its lead. In the area of lifestyle, Florida cannot be matched '

Alexander Grant & Co., a Chicago-based accounting firm surveyed business site-selection offices and evaluated 22 growth of taxes and revenue, environmental considerations and labor costs-in deciding which states had the best business climates. Florida's ranked 79.4 on a possible wale of

Jose Gomez, the firm's managing partner in Miami, said the unitary tax could not be evaluated in the study because it has been in effect for only three quarters. He said only full year revenue sources were considered in the study

Even if a $250 million unitary tax was figured into the evaluation, Gomez said, Florida's ranking would still have been first in the nation. He said a full year's unitary tax

29 points—still 2.5 points ahead of South Dakota's rating

The unitary tax, enacted last year, requires corporations with Florida plants to base its corporate tax on worldwide sales not just sale in Florida. Some corporate giants have retaliated by cancelling expansion plans in Florida

Graham said he talked with executives of IBM last week and was assured that the computer company would change its mind about curtailing Florida operations, if the state limited the unitary tax to sales within the United States.

The governor said he was amenable to "a water's edge limit" if the Florida Legislature would find additional tax sources for the $15 million that would be lost by deleting overseas sales from the tax base

Graham said repealing the sales tax exemption on computer software or increasing corporate filing fees would make up the lost revenue

Graham and Lt. Gov. Wayne Misson, who serves as secretary of commerce, announced plans for an aggressive marketing campaign in business journals to promote Florida's first place showing.

Misson unveiled a new advertising poster, featuring a Florida palm tree towering above such landmarks as the Empire State Builsing, San Francisco's TransAmerica pyramid, the Peachtree Plaza in Atlanta and the St. Louis end that's down," Meek said. "More time is needed. To strive toward excellence does not mean that one group that has been culturally and educationally deprived in the past should be left behind."

But Education Commissioner Ralph Turlington said he doubted Meek's figures on the number of students who would be forced out of college should the CLAST take effect in the fall.

"I do not believe the scores as presently set would eliminate students who are reads in any respect to move on to upper division," Turlington said, "I do not believe any ethnic group will be eliminated by up to 30 percent."

Turlington could not give specific numbers on the effect of the CLAST on black students, but estimated, it would be 'significantly less' than the figure Meek cited.

But the bill's opponents said further delay on implementing CLAST would hamper efforts to improve the quality of education in Florida's colleges and universities. They also objected to an amendment by Lawson which would have funded remedial programs to help students pass the test, Rep. Betty Fasley, R.Largo, said the state's Compensatory Education program, designed to help primary and secondary school students whose failure was caused by poor instruction and guidance, should be enough.

In the meantime, she said, it is time to begin enforcing higher academic standards. "Not everybody can pass CLAST," she said. "Not everybody should pass CLAST."

Rep. T.K. Wetherell, D.Allandale, himself an educator, said the state has not spent enough on Compensatory Education to make any difference for the state's students, but agreed it is time to begin enforcing academic standards.

'You can't administer a school with constantly changing dates (for implementation of programs like CLAST)," he said. "We set a date. We've backed off on it two times, as I

Finally, the committee decided to forward Lawson's bill to the appropriations committee with a recommendation that it not be approved. Usually, such a negative report is the kiss of death for a bill.

After the vote, Lawson seemed bitter,

You have people on the committee who just don't care if 10,000 minority students don't make it educationally," he told reporters. "They care basically about standards, but they don't care how those standards affect other students.

They need to respond to the needs of the black citizens in their districts as well as the white," he said. "I oday the people pleaded with them to look at the problem, to see that you have 10,000 people who aren't going to make it. Look at why they're not going to make it.

"The Florida school system is getting more and me segregated," Lawson said

But Lawson fared better with a bill heco-sponsored with Appropriations Committee Chair Herb Morgan, D Tallahassee, 11B844 would make it easier for eligible state workers to take free college classes in state universities,

At present, state workers are allowed to sign up for courses under a fee waiter system, but only so long as classroom seats aren't completely filled by fee-paying students. Lawson argued the fee-waiver system was meaningless as a fringe benefit because the courses state employees are most likely to take-business or public administration for example-are also so popular with fee paying students that there's often no room for the state workers.

Lawson and Morgan wanted to let the state reimburse state workers for tuition paid toward approved classes, so long as the courses are work related. The committee refused last week to go along with the proposal, but gave the two lawmakers a second chance to make their case. A few amendments did the trick. The version of the bill passed Monday would limit the number of credit hours for which an employee could be reimbursed to 18 per year, and gives workers' supervisors authority to decide whether the course is job related or not. It passed, 7-5.

'American Parade' is a bust

Time calls him "The laureate of the common man" A Washington columnist once described him as the flag that waves himself. He calls himself a provider of "news that no one else is reporting." He is Charles Kuralt, a verteran CBS journalist best known for his On the Road pieces aired on the evening news. Kuralt recently moved into prime time with his show, The American Purade, an hour length collection of features and profiles on life in the USA. It seems like a good idea. America's favorite roadie hooking up with equally experienced reporters to provide a charming and intelligent alternative to The A. Jeum, which arry at the same hour on NBC. However, if the first three segments are proof enough, The American Parade is a bust for a variety of reasons.

The show's sponsors represent a potential problem. Falk about the Fortune 500 American Express, IBM, Sears, ATAT, Shell and wher heavy weights all own a piece of this show. These companies aren't about to invest in a program that balances sugary reportage with forays into the darker facets of the American Dream. And how can we blame them? It would be like our hiring a person to mug us

Kuralt's philosophy also is troublesome. He said in an interview with Time that The American Parade "will be resolutely American, with no foreign reporting, and celebratory in tone We do not expect to find any scandals or scoundrels." Chambers of commerce across the country must love this reporter who is so willing to look the other way at some of the problems facing this country.

True to his word, Kuralt's show in past weeks has been bland, tedious and gutless. The April 3 premiere's first piece was on whether or not Muhammed Ali is suffering from brain damage Pretty heady stuff, no? This was followed by Kuralt chatting with an 84-year-old Lowell

TELEVISION

Davis who keeps a list of everyone he meets. So far, Davis has amassed 3,587 names, most of them accompanied with a cryptic note to jar Davis' memory. Much could be done with this story of an anachronistic old man creating his own Spoon River Anthology But Kuralt does little with it, in fact, he unintentionally makes Davis look like a loon. Luckily, the premiere was salvaged by its last segment on individuals experiencing drunkenness without drinking Apparently, this is caused by a yeast that ferments a person's carbohydrates into alcohol. The piece centered on how a man curved with the condition for over 30 years helped a youngster with the same problem come to terms with it

However, touching and substantive stories like this are all too rare on The American Parade. The last two shows have reported on auditioning for the film version of 4 Chorus Line, on a Portland banker who refurbishes carousels, on convicted murderers and armed rubbers teaching learning disabled children and on Richard Nixon musing about the Watergate daze. Taken alone, these pieces wouldn't be hard to take. But piled on top of one another, and sprinkled with kuralt's endless grins and chuckles, is just too much. On the Road worked because it helped us deal with predominantly depressing news. It was an electronic sugar fix. But more doesn't necessarily mean better Watching The American Parade is a sure was to catch diabetes. Flip the channel to The A. Team - at least those guys don't offer us fluff disguised as Something Significant

The American Parade airs weekly on Tuesday night at 8 on WTVY channel 4 and on WCTV channel 6, cable 9.

BY MARK MOBLEY FLAMBEAU STAFF WRITTE

Tonight's University Symphons Orchestra program contains three great big neces. Two of these, The Planets and La Mer, are staples of the repertoire. The third work is a dissertation by Michael Cox in the form of a Concerto for Two Pianos The oncerto premiere will feature faculty duomanists Leonard and Norma Mastrogiacomo and will be conducted by composer. The Orchestra's Music Director, Phillip Spurgeon, will onduct the Holst and Debussy

Cox, 36, teaches at the Oklahoma Baptist University, where he completed his nachelor's degree in piano performance following receipt of a ma-ter's degree from he Cincinnati Conservatory in orchestral onducting, he came to FSU and studied omposition with John Boda and Roy

Cox began work on the Concerto in 1981 after hearing the Mastrogiacomos perform his Toccata again for the Fall 1983 WFSU FM benefit concert.) Cox said he was impressed by their performance and thought it would be fun to utilize their gifts and talents in my dissertation."

The new Concerto is Cox's biggest work to date, coming after a brass ensemble and a set of variations on "Wondrous Love" for band, both of which date from the seventies. The Concerto represents his first attempt at orchestral composition Following the initial rehearsals, he said that he "is quite pleased with the string writing," and justifiably so

Interesting orchestral writing was a primary concern for Cox. While conducting members of the Oklahoma Symphony in concerto performances, he noticed that orchestra players do not enjoy concerto iferature. I wanted to give the orchestra omething to play." That idea is noble but difficult to realize without drowning the oloist in accompaniment

The second and third movements pose no great difficulty in hearing the pianos, but Cox said that, "I'm not real pleased with balance in the first movement." Still, the complaint is minimal when compared with the work as a viable a healer

The composer cites the two-piano works of Bartok and Stravinsky as models and auributes some of his Concerto's lushness the example of Rachmaninoff University Symphony players have detected small traces of Respighi in the second movement and large deposits of American romanticism in the first movement. The Concerto, while it is not strikingly original, immediately demonstrates a sureness of

The second work on tonight's program is Claude Debussy's La Mer, a suite of three symphonic sketches. Over the years, the works of Debussy (1862 1918) have been identified with the impressionist movement in painting. This designation is somewhat false, since Debussy himself revealed that his models were poets-Baudelaire, Verlaine and Mallarme rather than

Yet the works of Debusss are probably as close as one can come to musical counterpart to impressionist ideas. His lines are often exotic and seductive as they lead the listener on without the gratification of formal cadences

La mer caught on in the mid 20th century as a showpiece for orchestras and their conductors. The suite has also served as inspiration for many music entics of the freely adjectival variety Debussy biographer Oscar Thompson wrote of the second movement that. "On the sea's vast stage is presented a trancelike phantasmagoria so evanescent and fugitive that it leaves behind only the vagueness of a

Perhaps the cleverest of such critics was Corneel Mertens, who realized that "from La mer onwards Debussy achieved a new fluidity of rhythm '

Gustav Holst (1874-1934) was one of the most popular English composers of his day, and his seven movement suite The Planets has remained by far his most popular work since his death. Many people associate Holst with little more than this one work despite the existence of a sizeable body of fine compositions

The University Symphony Orchestra performs tonight at 8 in Ruby Diamond Auditorium. FSU students with an ID get in free, $2 for senior citizens and other students, $4 general public.

Smith wins Boston Marathon

NITED PRINCIPLE NATIONAL

BOSTON - Geoff Smith of Britain won 88th Boston Marathon Monday, orinting across the finish line ahead of early 7,000 other runners who raced over he grueling course in a persistent cold

Smith, who was favored to win, finished he 26-mile, 385-yard race with a time of 2 10 34, not quite 2 minutes slower than the course record set by Alberto Salazar in 1987

.Taking second place in the men's arathon was ferry Vanesse of New Milford, Conn, who finished in 2:14.48, followed by Colombian Domingo Tibaduiza

New Zealand's Lorraine Moller won the women's division with an unofficial time of 2-29.27

Smith, a senior at Providence College, who was running in only his second marathon ever, needed the race to qualify for his country's Olympic marathon team.

Smith began the race quickly, led at the early checkpoints and forced the pace. His time at the half-marathon mark was 1:04 14

Smith maintained a 2:10 pace through the first 15 miles, which he completed in over his nearest challenger at the time, David Olds, of Bloomfield Hills, Mich

Smith slowed down to a 2.12 finishing time pace at the 20 mile mark, where he was clocked at 1 38 57

Smith said if the weather had been better "I could have run two or three minutes

His time does not guarantee him a place on the British Olympic Team, he said, but "it should impress them. It impressed me."

"I just ran as I felt," he added "The first mile, I said I just had to control myself and slow myself down."

Smith said the wind was "always against you I felt it most between the 10 and 20mile marks. I ran it the way I planned to."

The win for Moller, one of the early favorites in the women's division, netted her a place on her country's Olympic team - a goal she said was more important to her than winning the Boston race.

She said she would have been happy with a time of 2-32

She passed fellow country woman Allison Roe in the 19th mile Roe, who has experienced hamstring injuries, had been expected to be hampered by the cold

Rattlers spring practices winding down

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Going into the last week of spring practice, the Florida A&M football team went through a rather slow-paced session Monday, working more on fundamentals

"We slowed it down a little today," said head coach Rudy Hubbard. "We've been coming out here and trying to cover so many things. But today did it a little different On our passing game, we tried to improve on reading the defense. Our passing game could be pretty complicated if we get it right

With only two more practices left this spring, Hubbard

The team received some bad news recently when doctors told nose guard Eddie McDowell he should not participate in football. # Putting NATO to rest

BY FARI C. RAVENAL

In the past few years, the tides of discontent have been lapping at the base of the Atlantic alliance. The most severe criticism has come from elements of the European left and the American right. Indeed, if NATO is ever washed away, it may well be attributable to a sort of unholy coalition of these factions.

But there is a more basic reason for NATO's weakness.

Simply, the U.S. military guarantee of Europe has become increasingly unreliable. This commitment, made 34 years ago, forces the United States to choose between the unsupportable cost of defending the continent with conventional forces and the unacceptable risk of relying on the earliest use of nuclear weapons.

But what is the alternative?

Any discussion of the American interest in NATO requires an understanding of both our global position and our domestic utuation—particularly the federal budget deficit, of which defense expenditures are a large component

Defense is the price of foreign policy. If we want to retain our present foreign policy and national defense strategy, we must have something like our present forces and military expenditures. Not much will be saved by a few efficiencies or wonder weapons or other tinkering. Nor does the solution lie in emphasizing conventional over nuclear defenses.

An alternative stance toward Europe will mean changing our overall strategy of deterrence and forward defense—a stretegy in place for almost four decades.

In short, we need a national strategy of disengagement which implies the end of the American undertaking to defend Europe.

Europe now is our most expensive commitment by any measure—whether troops, dollars, risk. In terms of forces, I judge that for fiscal year 1983, more than half of our 20 active ground divisions will be deployed in NATO/Europe at a cost of some $129 billion—more than 40 percent of the defense budget and one-seventh of the entire U.S. federal budget.

If we were to adopt a non-protective attitude toward Europe, over a decade of gradual disengagement we could

Panel suggests changes in FSU athletics

BY CURT FIELDS

Although room for improvement was found particularly in the areas of recruitment, academic advisement and housing the specially appointed Florida State University "Committee on the Student Athlete" for the most part gave the FSU athletic department a clean bill of health.

The committee was appointed by ESU President Bernie Shger in March, 1983, in the wake of an athlete grade-padding scandal Comprised of faculty members, athletic department administrators and students, the committee heard many hours of testimony and studied survey results from faculty and student athletes, then recommended several changes regarding the treatment of student athletes at FSU.

'Our study uncovered neither scandal nor ficking time bombs,' states the introduction to the committee's report "In general, we are doing rather well, but we can improve

One area for improvement cited by the committee is the admissions policy for athletes at FSU. The committee recommended that the athletic department accept no more than 25 athletes per year who score below the Florida Board of Regents' minimum 840 SAT score and a high school GPA of 2.0. Such "automatic exceptions" are used by other departments as well. The idea is to allow people with a particular talent—be if the 100 meter dash or acting—that doesn't show up in standardized testing to enter college.

The committee recommended that the 25 exceptions be divided between the men's and women's athletic programs, with 15 going to the men and 10 to the women. The athletic department itself would then decide the distribution by sport.

More than 25 athletic exceptions a year would strain FSU's advising and academic support resources beyond capacity, according to the committee. This year, according to Leo Sandon, chairman of the committee, the athletic department used 34 exceptions; 20 for males, 14 for females.

"Let's be up front and let's budget it," said Sandon.
"Give them a finite number of exceptions. They're like the Pentagon on weaponry. We're saying don't keep going back to the well."

FSU athletic director C W- "Hootie" Ingram claimed the athletic department was within the recommended limit this year. "We went by that in this recruiting year," said Ingram the declined to comment on how the limit affected recruiting until he had spoken with the various coaches involved.

Sandon, however, stood by the figure of 34 exceptions. FSU head coach Bobby Bowden could not be reached for comment Tuesday—his secretary said he was out of town.

"I think it would hurt recruiting at FSU," said assistant head football coach Art Baker, of the exception recommendation. Baker joined the program in January

"Unfortunately, a lot of the great athletes in this country don't have the high SATs. I think you shouldn't bring a student in unless you feel he has the ability to graduate." Baker said the football program at Furman University, where he once worked, used exceptions and had a graduation rate in the 90 to 98 percent range for athletes. "It certainly is not written in granite that a student with a low SAT score won't graduate," he said.

In addition to the 25 exceptions per year limit, the committee recommended that all athletes admitted under the

The body of a young woman found vesterday in a wooded lot just off the intersection of the Apalachee Parkway and Carrin Drive has been identified as Melissa Bean, a 16-year-old Lincoln High school student, according to Tallahassee Police Department spokesman Scott Hunt.

Hunt said Bean was last seen at 2.15 Monday afternoon. at a Lincoln High school bus stop. Her body, clad in a blouse, was found in the wooded area at approximately 4.45 that afternoon by a man walking home from work

Police crack down on video games

A nationwide investigation into illegal video games also touched Tallahassee Monday, as nine video games were confiscated at local businesses

According to Leon County Sheriff's Department spokesman Dick Simpson, deputies were working in conjunction with the Jacksonville office of the Florida Department of Law Enforcement when they went into several businesses around town and seized the video games, called "Fun 'n' Skill '

The games generally cost 25 cents to play. For a quarter, players can play poker or another card game against the machine to earn points. Players receive tokens, credits or prizes for winning replays or scoring high

Under Florida law, it is legal for a game of skill to award up to 15 replays to the player but no prizes

They are games of chance, which is a violation of state

Several arrests were made throughout Florida, but none of the Tallahassee businessmen were suspected of any wrongdoing, Simpson said.

The investigation began in Indiana, which is the home of United Vending, an amusement game company in Indianapolis Raids were carried out by Indiana state police of two United Vending warehouses, and one arrest was made

In Florida, over 100 vending machines were confiscated by law enforcement authorities. Floyd A. Odum, 36, of Jacksonville, and Donald Noe, 19, of Lakeland, were arrested in the raids in Florida and charged with racketeering

More raids and or arrests were made in connection with United Vending in Georgia, Alabama, Illinois and

Legislature sends governor child-abuse bill

The House Tuesday unanimously sent Gov. Bob Graham a bill that would authorize the death penalty for child abusers who kill helpless youngsters

Without debate, the House voted 114.0 for the bill (SB 72), which cleared the Senate unanimously on the first day of the legislative session

The bill adds "aggravated child abuse" to the list of homicides punishable by death. The maximum penalty for the crime had been 15 years in prison.

The bill was prompted by the case of Ursula Sunshine

Assaid, a Seminole County child who was tortured for a week before her body was dumped in an Altamonte Springs

A man was convicted of second-degree murder and sentenced to 34 years in prison, but could not be tried for first-degree murder because it could not be proved he intended to kill the girl

From 1979 to 1982 there were 49 deaths from "child battery and other maltreatment," according to a legislative

A matter of timing

One thing we enjoy about the Reagan administration is its wonderful sense of timing Remember last Christmas-tide when, while thousands lined up at soup kitchens, presidential counselor Ed Meese asserted that hunger is not a problem in the United States? That episode did more than anything Reagan's opposition could have done to dramatize just how insensitive the administration is to the problems his policies are causing

Now the president's men have done it again, this time for his foreign policy. This week it became known that Reagan has approved a new strategy for dealing with international terrorism, and will in short order ask Congress to allow him to make reprisals and use preemptive force against terrorists like the ones who blew up the Marine compound in Beirut last year, or those who seized the U.S. embassy in Tehran

Leave aside for the moment the wisdom of such a policy. Consider instead the irony of Reagan's timing. This very month it also became known that the CIA, possibly under Reagan's direction, although no one knows for sure how much he knew about it-supervised a minelaving operation in Nicaraguan harbors. Reagan calls such activity "collective defense" Most everybody else in the world - including most of our allies and some of Reagan's best friends in Congress are calling it terrorism.

And they're right. It is terrorism Imagine the uproar if a foreign government decided to mine an American harbor, for any reason Most Americans would consider such behavior an act of war. Reagan himself, judging by reports of his new campaign against international terrorism, would feel justified in launching reprisal raids against the offending party

Acts of violence against foreign powers are not considered terrorism if a state of declared war exists between the antagonists, but although we are mining their harbors and bombing their hospitals, schools and homes, we have not declared war against the Nicaraguans. Indeed, we say with great shows of righteousness that we seek negotiations with then government

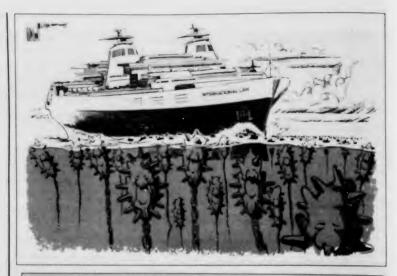

Are the mines intended to force Nicaragua to the bargaining table? The Sandinistas have been saying they're ready to talk for months. Are they intended to stop the flow of arms from the Soviet Union and Cuba through Nicaragua to the Salvadoran rebels? The administration has not yet been able to document any significant flow of arms to El Salvador via Nicaragua, despite repeated attempts to do

In fact, military officials told a Congressional committee recently that most of the arms held by the Salvadoran rebels are U.S.-made. captured or purchased from corrupt Salvadoran Army personnel. The mines were placed to scare off foreign shipping-to starve Nicaragua into submission to Reagan's will. As an administration spokesman said privately recently, the message wasn't directed at Moscow, it was directed at Lloyds of London.

So what do you make of an administration that piously proclaims war on international terrorism, even as it joins the terrorist brotherhood? Which speaks of peace while committing acts of war? Which endorses the rule of international law even as it holds itself

Ed Meese's insensitivity was bad enough-we're long used to such from the Reagan administration. But this hypocrisy is loathesome, designed as it is to veil gunslinging foreign policy that is undermining the struggle for justice in Central America and, with it, the interests of the United States, is too much

How much longer will the American people stand for such abuse of its ideals and its interests?

As the academic dean for several thousand students in Basic Studies, I am always interested in ways to improve the environment in which they

I hope as many Basic Studies students who can will take a few minutes to respond (anunymously) to our questionnaire. ## Spend, spend, spend

Today, I'm going grocery shopping. This week, I can fill my grocery cart with Cruise missiles, Trident submarines, MX missiles, Pershing II misules, B.1 bombers, laser-space weapons, antisatellite weapons, chemical weapons, mines for Swaraguan ports, and guns for guerrillas-all for only $55 per average American family

For 1985, President Reagan is requesting $1.98 billion for Star Wars space weapons. This fantasy package includes laser and particle beams which will strike Soviet missiles after they have been launched. However, the science community has alreads precluded their feasibilits in recognizing the Soviet response hardened and reflective materials that would blunt the effect of lasers, launching decoys to confuse and saturate the defense, rotating missiles that would disperse laser beam energy, and several other possibilities. Guaranteed to fail and priced right ($24 billion by 1989), Reagan considers it a must for today's catastrophe connouseurs.

I'm the type of person who likes to stand in the aisle and read the fine print on labels of what I buy.

By rule of thumb, I try to avoid anything that requires a Ph D. in chemistry to understand its ingredients. Nor can I swallow President Reagan's $1.1 billion request for rebuilding and maintaining a stockpile of chemical weapons so we can have a "strong deterrent" and a "bargaining chip" for banning them. Is the Soviet Union going to attack the U.S. with chemical weapons simply because we don't have a massive stockpile? How does a president's rhetoric sensibly include "build" and "ban" in the same thought? Nevertheless, another ingredient in the arms race is being added

How about some seafood? Today, a new aquatic species is being served. With the power to destroy 408 cities at one time-enough to destroy any country on Earth each Indent submarine is approximately equal to 2,040 Hiroshimas. Reagan believes this is a real bargain and wants to spend $60 billion to build 30 of them. Thus, the arms face continues at sea

Coming down the next aisle to the refrigerated products, I find cold relations between Reagan and Moscow. The frozen nuclear arms negotiations do nothing to cool the tensions in diplomacy between the superpowers. Contrary to pacifying the situation, Mr. Reagan wants $30 billion for 40 MX musules a destabilizing first-strike weapon. In the meantime. Cruise and Pershing II missiles are being placed us minutes from Moscow. In accordance with his build before-banning policy, Reagan is seeking $143 million for anti-satellite weapons because he does not believe a ban is verifiable. But once again, the scientists are proving him wrong and once again the President remains deaf to their data and the offers of the Soviet Union to negotiate

Mans of us are guilty of busing things we don't need, but I think we can all agree that this is not a smart practice for an indebted government especially at $30,996 to the Pentagon for everyone of the 61,019,000 families in the United States over the next five years. Considering 12 out of 19 congressional districts in Florida alone are losing money to the Pentagon in taxes versus defense contracts, it is evident that the only ones getting fat on Reagan's budget are those in the Military Industrial Complex. As for the rest of us, Reagan's 30,000-course defense dinner is causing an epidemic of indigestion

SAN SAI VADOR, El Salvador-The shadow of a little-noted air war is falling over this country's rural population, emptying towns and terrorizing civilians in the countryside

In recent months, incidents of government air strikes launched independently of ground operations have increased sharply, according to Western and Salvadoran observers, including bombing and rocket attacks by A 37B Dragonfly aircraft and armed UH-1 Huey helicopters. Often the air operations have been directed against areas inhabited by civilians, according to church sources and refugee workers here.

Further, in responding to questions about the attacks, in recent weeks Salvadoran military commanders and some U.S. observers increasingly have emphasized a distinction between truly neutral "civilians" and "masas," or civilians who are suspected of providing food and logistical support to guerrillas

"The guerrillas use the 'masas' for support," explained Col. Jorge Adalberto Cruz Reves at his headquarters garrison at San Francisco Gotera in the embattled Morazan province "They use children as young as 8 years old as couriers, while women and the elderly cook their food and pass warning signals." Where guernilas are present, says Cruz, the civilians "who don't want to cooperate leave the area, and those who remain are collaborating '

Salvadoran critics, however, charge that the expanded air war is cruelly and unjustly targeting crvilians in an attempt "to drain the that is, to clean out the civilran population from zones where the Salvadoran army cannot control the ground.

People speak about the violence of the death squads, and correctly so." says Maria Julia Hernandez of Tutela Legal, the archbishop's human rights office in San Salvador. "But they should also speak about the violence of the bombing."

In 1983, about 1,000 civilian deaths could be confirmed in the wake of air attacks, according to Tutela Legal. (In 1983, death

'The biggest enemy are the planes'

squad killings numbered 1,249 ) Activity since the fall of 1983, however, has accelerated. Hernandez says the air war death. count is "very difficult" to track

Some towns and hamlets in zones such as northern Morazan do in fact appear abandoned. Elsewhere, only 25 miles northeast of San Salvador in the department of Cuscatlan, the once pretty and bustling major town of Tenancingo is now eerily quiet and depopulated in the wake of government bombing in September in which dozens of civilians died. Children's toys lie broken on the main street. The doors of houses and the town church on the deserted plaza are blown away to reveal their gutted insides From Tenancingo, the first signs of habitation-some laundry hanging on a line-only appear several miles down a dirt road toward the Pan American highway

A US military observer said aerial bombardment has increased sharply in recent weeks as government forces step up attacks to prevent guerrillas from interfering in El Salvador's current election process. Analysts at the Catholic University of Central America in San Salvador, however, argue that the air attacks are part of a wider recent "strategic shift" in government tactics toward what one called "a technification of this war," including air strikes not linked to ground operations, and use of U.S.-provided

Some of the intelligence for air and land operations comes from two-man OV-1 Mohawk spy planes flown over Salvadoran territory by U.S. pilots based in Honduras. The planes can detect movements of persons on the ground at night through the use of sophisticated infrared scopes developed during the war in Vietnam

Nevertheless, air attacks are called in only on "observed targets" and in answer to "observed firmg," according to the U.S. military observer

Civilians themselves, who are arriving here in growing numbers—as one refugee shelter worker said, "fundamentally from the bombing now" believe that they themselves are the targets

"They say there are guerrillas there," said a 41 year-old woman from a rural area near Suchrtoto, about 27 miles north of here, who arrived at a refugee camp on foot with five children on March 8 "Look at this one," she demanded angrily, pointing to her 7 year old son "Is he a guerrilla? No What the authorities want in certain places is to finish everybody off."

Since last August, said the woman, government forces "haven't returned by land, only by air" A bomb destroyed her house Jan 20 For several weeks the family 'lived under trees with families who lost their houses in other bombings. It is not as difficult now as it will be soon when the rain starts, but there is no food."

She feared traveling on roads in daylight, said the woman, but finally decided to emerge from the hills to look for medicine when her infant and the "year old became ill Her husband, a farmer, staved in the hills, she said. Two older children, boxs aged 12 and 14, were killed by a bomb last June 17, as they walked toward the house carrying wood

"Now the biggest enemy are the planes, not the army," said a 24 year old woman from Platanaz who arrived at a shelter here on electron day, March 25. Her arms showed red, raised wounds she said were caused by shrapnel "Bombs have been falling every she said, adding that recently many have taken to spending more time in "tatus," trenches dug into the earth for protection, than in their houses, which they feel are

A 14-year-old girl, who airived at another camp from La Pava March M, said her parents, a visiting neighbor and five brothers and sisters began running when they heard the sound of planes one afternoon three weeks before, but didn't reach a shelter in time. The explosion killed her father and wounded two brothers, she said. The girl showed ragged webs on her upper right arm which she said were caused by "metal flying" from the bomb. Skin was peeling from her right hand, which she said was hurned by material from the bomb, and which she keeps wrapped in a wet handkerchief "to keep down the heat '

So expected is the bombing in some areas that refugees report the daily rounds of chores, lessons and family meals now may start after dark where once they started at dawn, since attacks are less likely to come at night. A woman from a town on the flanks of Guazapa volcano, long considered a rebel stronghold, said that in recent weeks she had been spending most hours isf the day with her children in the "tatu" shelter. She finally decided to make her way out of the zone when nine persons were killed nearby March 4 "by airplanes and a helicopter," and when "11 bombs fell" March 10, killing a woman and two children

According to Maria Julia Hernandez of Lutela Legal, some peasants no longer able to grow crops in the beleaguered Guazapa area have traveled to the shores of a dain north of Suchitoro to fish for food. Now that zone too is being hit hard by aerial

America's oldest man dies

L NITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

OAKLAND, Calif.—Arthur Reed, who was born the year Abraham Lincoln was elected president and who possibly was the oldest man in the United States, has died two months short of his 124th birthday.

Details about Reed's death Sunday were not available from relatives Tuesday, but nealways had been in relatively vigorous health. Friends said he looked 40 years younger than his age. He was born June 28, 1860.

Reed has been married three times but had no children "because I work all the time".

"I don't drink or smoke," he always said "I got drunk one time and I never got drunk again."

Reed's age had been verified by the Social Security Administration, which has been paying him benefits since 1944, just seven years after the agency was established

On his last birthday, he was interviewed on television and expressed pleasure with the way he appeared, saying, "It might carry me somewhere. I may find a wife and have her carry me around."

He said, "They made me out of good dirt. They took time and they made me good."

Reed, a black, said he was born in Buffalo, N.Y., and his mother took him South during the Civil War while she was a cook for Union Army troops. He left home when he was nine and spent much of his life working his way on various jobs from state to state

At 98 he was farming 10 acres of cotton in Fresno, Calif. At 111 he was riding his bicycle. Until age 116, he worked part time as a watchman at the Phoenix Iron Works where in earlier days he heaved 100 pound sacks of ore off boxcars.

save half of the $2 trillion we are now committed to spend there and, at the end of the decade, we would be spending, annually, only a third of the amount now projected.

The question always has been whether the United States is getting its money's worth out of its forward strategy. In fact, the cost of the alliance may exceed our

Or to put it another way, in the ultimate calculus of deterrence, the losses we might usuam in the future by not deterring might be less than the present costs of deterrence particularly given the low probability that an attack would occur because we failed to deter If we are to choose between competing options, such comprehensive and complex calculations are the appropriate one.

The question does not disappear if we shift our defense "emphasis" to other regions or other allies say, to the Persian Gulf. The main point is that if America continues its role of global containment, Lurope will remain the key theater wherever the spark of war might be struck.

Nor, finally, is the problem resolved by choosing "deterrence" as cheaper than defense Arguing that present forces are adequate for deterrence, though not for conventional defense, just begathe question of whether deterrence will hold. For iddeterence "fails," we must use either our nuclear forces or surrender. There is no was to defend Europe both safels and cheaply.

In a thorough and consistent disengagement from Europe, the United States would allow the European states to assume defensive tasks themselves, but would not insist on complete replacement of all current U.S. capabilities—not harbor dlusions about maintaining U.S. weight in European decision making

Disengagement would proceed at a deliberate pace, with consultation at all stages. It probably would take a decade of diplomacy and rearrangement. But these are details, they would not alter the objective—progressively reducing Purope's military dependence on us and insulating ourselves from conflict in Europe

Intermediate moves toward disengagement might resemble some other strategic options. At first, we would encourage our allies to develop what they considered to be sufficient conventional capabilities. We would begin to reduce U.S. forces in Europe, attempting to elicit—but not insisting on—a parallet withdrawal of Soviet forces.

Simultaneously we would devise nuclear discrimes that more clearly decoupled U.S. strategic forces from the defense of Lurope We would maintain strategic sufficiency that is, coverage that would deter a nuclear strike on our own homeland.

In sum, by pursuing disengagement, we would treat I urope as we have all through our history prior to the Cold War, as a large buffer, and as a test of the long term intentions of potential adversaries.

In reality. American disengagement might be precipitated by moves made by our NATO allies—such as withdrawing contingents of forces or denying bases or communications lines. Some of these things already have happened—principally when Charles DeGaulle withdrew French support from NATO in 1966. Another example might be Norway's barring storage of nuclear arms on its territory. Such actions would allow U.S. disengagement to proceed as a response to the initiatives of others.

Meanwhile, it would become understood that the U.S. response in a hypothetical war was less reliable. Europeans might then react by adopting self-reliant forces to handle contingencies in which they previously relied on U.S. forces.

Is this argument a prescription for U.S. withdrawal from NATO or is it, rather, a prediction? The answer is both.

Ultimately, we will have to consider when, and to what extent, we want to be responsible for protecting other nations. Already the answer is, not in all circumstances, not unconditionally.

One does not have to urge the dissolution of NATO, certainly not an immediate, formal break NATO is an alliance that less dependable year by year, as objective changes crede the validity of the essential condition of the alliance—the American guarantee NATO need not lose its form, at least not until long after it has lost its obstance.

Perhaps the situation can best be summed up by a metaphor. NATO, after 14 years, is like some old, unused medicine on the shelf. The bottle is still there and the label remains the same, but if you ever go to use it, you find that the contents have long since evaporated or spoiled.

Coalition politcs: The happy couple make kissy-face on the House floor

Yes, but what about the children?

BY D.K. ROBERTS

FLAMBLAL STAFF WRITE

For stony limits cannot hold love out

—Romeo and Juliet II is

Edward VIII and Wallis Simpson. Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh. Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer.

Dexter Lehtinen and Ileana Ros. A fine romance.

The rumors have been rife: the star-crossed lovers were sighted a while back in the towel and sheets department at Penney's. And yesterday in the House, the announcement was made. Ileana and Dexter are getting hitched. See what happens when you have single-member districts?

It is the one hot story of the session—she, exotic Cubanborn principal of a private school, member of Miami, District 110; he, gallant ex-Green Beret lawyer with an M.A. from Columbia, member for Perrine. Sigh. If this isn't IV movie material, I don't know what is.

Ace reporters were smelling out the scoop in the early hours of the morning. Representative Roa's aide, smiling an "aren't they cute" smile said "NO comment" in that way that means so much to those with National Enquirer minds. Lee Moffit also said "No comment" but his was a father-of-the-bride kind of smirk. The Lucky Man himself was not so reticent. Dexter Told All in the connecting corridor on the second floor of the Capitol. He revealed that they had met last year as Freshman Reps at the Press Club Skits. Dexter remembers everything about that magic evening. Michael Ollove of the Miami Herald played Temik, chief pesticide and MC of the show. Afterwards, lleana and Dexter went out into the honeysuckle-scented Tallahassee night for an a deux ice cream cone at Baskin and Robbins. Chocolate chip.

9-57 a.m. and the floor of the House is buzzing with betrothal excitement. Some members of the press in the gallery call for rice but the only available is cooked. Members amble in, pulling University of Miami t-shirts on over what they're wearing. Ron Silver's gone the whole nine yards: Hurricane baseball cap and all. It's an historic day in the House. Howard Schnellenberger is coming.

A Match Made in the Rules Committee: Ileana comes in wearing teal and green silk. There is much hugging and ogling of the ring. Dexter comes in looking at the floor. The House is called to order for the prayer which is very long and tedious today. A House wag says "play ball!"

The Big Moment: Allen Morris makes the official announcement. The House cheers: Dexter kusses Ileana.
Lee Moffit says the whole thing is "evidence of a new spirit of cooperation between Republicans and Democrats."
Yes, it's a mixed marriage. But I'll bet that won't bother Dexter and Ileana. They have adjoining his 'n' hers districts. They can maintain a domicile in each one so they don't have to run against each other for a seat in the House.

Rep. Johnson demands that the children be brought up Republicans. Ileana, all that beauty too rich for use, etc., laughs.

Finally, the House settles down to some serious solonbusiness like cheering for Coach Howard (louder than they cheered for Ileana and Dexter but the Happy Couple surely understands that football is still more important than all this mushy love-stuff). Schnellenberger, who looks like Captain Kangaroo on caffeine, presents a signed football to the Speaker which he carries in a Wilson box. But Dexter and Ileana only had eyes for each other.

All the world loves a legislator in love. Rep. Mike Friedman of Miami Beach smiles cherubically every time the approaching nuprials are mentioned. "I just think it's wonderful that this process can yield such a wonderful relationship," he says. And Michael Ollove, who presided over the first flying of the eye-to-eye sparks between the two turtle doves, is sure that this rendition of Temik in 1983 was really something of Cupid-role. "It was a rather romantic portrayal," says the most renowned pesticide actor in the South. "I'm sure that it moved Dexier and Ileana to thoughts of love. A conehead does that to record."

Sigh. We jest at sears that never felt a wound. But this is REAL LOVE, ladies and gentlemen. The knot gets tied June 9th. And lleana and Dexter will walk off into the sunset, hand in hand, knee-deep in marsh water as they stroll through the Everglades at that magic point where their districts gently touch. ## Senate would close DUI loopholes

'We're just throwing up

more hurdles for prosecutors to clear.'

-Rep.

Dick Langley

LNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

A Senate committee passed a new drunken driving legislative package Tuesday designed to close some of the loopholes in Florida's already stringent DUI statutes

The Senate Judiciary Criminal Committee combined several DUI bills into one comprehensive tuneup of the 1982 law. The legislation approved unanimously by the panel would

 Impose a third-degree felony on a drunken driver who causes "great bodily harm, permanent disfigurement or permanent disability" as a result of an accident Current law makes it a first degree misdemeanor

 Allow courts to consider out of-state DUI convictions as prior offenses in Florida

 Impower officers to arrest persons suspected of DUI without actually seeing them commit the offense. The arrest would be based on his "reasonable belief" the crime was committed, said committee spokesmen.

 Allow judges to impose additional community service hours on convicted drunken drivers who are unable to pay the state's DUI fines, which range from $250 to $2,500

 Authorize law enforcement officers to use "reasonable force" to require a driver to take blood alcohol tests if the officer has probable cause to believe the driver has caused deaths or serious injuries.

· Removes any liability from medical personnel taking blood from DUI suspects. Spokesmen said the provision was designed to improve cooperation by some medical officials who have been reluctant to assist officers.

Orders the preparation of a citation in all DUI cases.
 Spokesmen for the Department of Motor Vehicles said tack of citations in some cases have resulted in a failure to revoke licenses.

The committee also approved separate legislation that would make DUI victims, as well as abused spouses, eligible for crime compensation through the state fund.

However, the panel expressed concern about the cost of compensating several thousand new victims each year. Herbert Parker, bureau chief for Crime Compensation, said the bill would cost about $2.5 million a year.

A corresponding House measure would fund the new compensations with increased court costs. Chairman Kenneth Jenne, D-Hollywood, indicated a similar solution might be amended into the Senate bill later in the legislative process.

The panel balked at one provision in a bill introduced by Sen. Betty. Castor, D-Tampa, that authorizes law enforcement officers to retain breath samples for possible future need in court.

"I just wonder if they are putting in new loopholes for people to get out of;" said Sen. Dick Langley, R-North Lake Minneola. "If you run those things over, you will get variable results."

"We're just throwing up more hurdles for the prosecutors to clear," he said.

There was also confusion over whether the breath samples can be preserved and for how long. The committee voted to postpone action on Castor's bill until it hears expert testimony on the subject.

Hospital cost agreement said close

NITED PRINCIPLES A DOUBLE

The chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee said Tuesday he expects a quick agreement on bills to rein spiraling health care costs.

Sen Harry Johnston, D. West Palm Beach, and Larl G. Ireadway, a lobbyrist for the Hospital Association of Florida, said they expected a breakthrough this week on hospital costs—which have been a major issue in the 1984 legislative session. Johnston and Treadway said they were nearing agreement on the inflation "trigger" that would bring about state review of hospital budgets.

The Senate Commerce Committee postponed consideration of hills (SB 176 & 697) agreed upon last week by the Health and Rehabilitative Services Committee last week, to "trigger" review by the Hospital Cost Containment Board of hospital budgets if an institution's spending exceeded the consumer price index by more than 4 percent this year. The limit would drop to 3 percent above the CP1 next year.

Johnston and Treadway said those "triggers" were being modified in line with bills (HB 506 & 965) approved last week by the House Health and Rehabilitative Services Committee, which would take a "market basket approach" to health care cost containment. Instead of measuring hospital cost increases against the CPL the House plan would gauge a hospital's spending hikes against the CPL, would gauge a hospital's spending hikes against an industry standard—limiting state board review to those that substantially exceed the rate of increase at other hospitals.

Treadway said the specialized nature of the hospital industry made it unfair to compare rising health care costs to rising consumer prices generally

"We still believe that the best interest of the people of Florida is to use the market-oriented approach," said Treadway.

Johnston also said he was awaiting a report from a subcommittee on health care for indigents, before proceeding with his cost-containment package.

Panel would increase drivers' license fees

I NITED PRESSINTERNATIONA

Examination fees for people who obtain a Florida driver's license for the first time should be hiked from $3 to $5, a House subcommittee decided Tuesday

The fee hike is part of a bill requiring people who move to Florida from other states to take driving tests, and the fee hike would pay for the extra testing

But some members of a House finance and tax subcommittee resisted charging extra for all the new drivers—including Florida teenagers getting their first license—to pay for testing people from out of state.

"This for Yankees?" inquired Rep. Carl Carpenter, D-Plant City.

"Well, it might be unconstitutional to single out the Yankees," answered Rep. Helen Gordon Davis, D. Yampa, sponsor of the bill

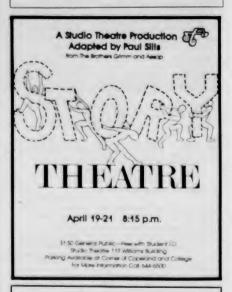

Davis pointed out the fee has not been raised since 1963. Testing the out-of-state drivers will cost about $990,000 a year. Davis said. Hiking thee fee from $3 to $5 for all people getting their first license would bring in more than $1 million annually, she said.

Rep. James Watt, R-Lake Park, offered an amendment that would have charged only the people moving into Florida the extra $2. But he withdrew it when Davis objected on the grounds it might not raise enough to pay for the testing program.

BY JAMES RIDGEWAY

NEW YORK-A major force behind · Jesse Jackson's extraordinary campaign for the presidency is an unsung community organization called ACORN headquarters in New Orleans and roots deep in the populist tradition, ACORN's black, white and Hispanic members across much of the nation represent the real rainbow in Jesse Jackson's coalition

ACORN organizers can Jackson's campaign in New Hampshire, fought Mayor Coleman Young's Detroit machine-which supported Mondale-to-a standstill, and helped Jackson get more than one-third of the Democratic vote in Arkansas, where ACORN began

In Bridgeport, Connecticut's largest city, Jackson polled second to Hart, ahead of Mondale, thanks to ACORN In the state as a whole, with a population seven percent black, Jackson took 12 percent of the vote

In Pittsburgh, ACORN members are running phone banks for Jackson, hauling

people to welfare offices so they can register, and preparing sit-ins if this effort is blocked in Texas, Missourt and Louisiana. ACORN groups are getting ready for the Jackson campaign

ACORN-Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now-is a neighborhood-based meni bership organization for low and moderate income people. Formed in 1970, it is an outgrowth of earlier political experiments, most notably those of Saul Alinsky, the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union, and the National Welfare Rights Organization, where ACORN's founder, Wade Rathke, worked

The organization now has 60,000 member families in 27 states in the Soluth, along the East Coast and across the Middle West, with chapters as far west as Arizona and Colorado and an aftiliate in California

The group is best known for local campaigns-fighting to open vacant housing for low income residents, to prevent the closing of libraries and day care centers, against sales taxes and insurance redlining for lifeline utility rates

In 1980, ACORN threw its energies into the Democratic presidential primary for the first time and persuaded both Edward Kennedy and Jimmy Carter to commit themselves to a program for giving lowincome people more say in party politics. In response, the party established a special commission which held hearings and issued a report with guidelines for a procedure to ensure participation of low income people

The report, in ACORN's view, has been . widely ignored "It was water off a duck's says Rathke, "just some more paper in the file So this year, we said if we're going to deliver the bacon, it will be for someone who puts teeth in those rules

Last spring, ACORN members in 30 cities met and listened to representatives of the Democratic presidential candidates. In two polls of its membership, with some 20,000 people participating, Jackson drew 56 percent, Mondale 35 percent. Hart received less than 100 votes, fewer than the 128 write-in ballots for Reagan

Since Jackson did not receive 75 percent,

ACORN, under its rules, could not formally endorse him. But it did encourage those communities who wanted to work for him to do so

Pete Ryder, the association's national political director, took a leave of absence and went to New Hampshire one month before the primary, when there were only two or three students working for Jackson Ryder rapidly pulled together an organization, set up phone banks, a press office, and was drawing thousands to meetings across the state before the "Hymie" remark brought massive defections, with volunteers literally fleeing to work for Hart

After New Hampshire, Ryder moved to Detroit, where Jackson faced powerful opposition from Mayor Coleman Young's organization and the unions, which essentially ran Mondale's Michigan operation. They spent little money, hoped for a low turnout and based their strategy on getting elderly retired members to the Young himself strongly opposed Jackson Reporters repeatedly were told by black city employees and union members that while they might prefer Jackson, they would vote for Mondale for fear of losing their jobs. Even the ballois WICEC intimidating each voter had to write his or her name. address telephone number at the top, then deposit the ballot in a box plainly labeled with the candidate's name, while into and union of ficials looked on

Yet in the two Detroit districts where ACORN ran bus service to polling booths and campaigned intensively, Jackson chalked up 30 and 40 percent of the vote

ACORN is by no means a captive diganisation in Philadelphia, where it played a prominent role in helping Wilson Goode win his bid for mayor, there is less enthusia in for a lackson effort. Goode is a firm supporter of Mondale, and ACORN want to run against him. (Voting took place last Tuesday, Jackson won 72 percent of the city's vote ) In St. Louis, another strong ACORN city, the Jackson campaign is refusing to cooperate with ACORN, and the two groups are going their separate ways.

But in Houston and Dallas, where the hope for Jackson is new black voters, ACORN organizers are working to register 5,000 by the May primary

"I believe the Jackson campaign appeals to conditions as opposed to color," says Elena Hanggi, ACORN's president. "That is, to people who are hurting, who have been ignored, or worse, trodden over by the Reagan administration.

"Rev Jackson seems to be the only candidate who can address the issues we have to face every day. Nobody harbors any illusion that he will be the Democratic candidate. That is not what this campaign is about. But those candidates will have to deal in concrete ways with the disenfranchisement we feel."

"We're dealing with a people's movement toward Jackson that transcends any organization. We're just in step with the larger force," says Rathke

ST. LOUIS—Jesse Jackson and Gars Hart, working hard while Walter Mondale takes a breather, campaigned Tuesday in Missouri and Indiana, two of the midwestern states regarded as part of the former vice president's political turf

In Kansas City, Jackson told reporters at an airport news conference that at least one member of Congress has been looking into the possibility of beginning impeachment proceedings against President Reagan for his actions in Central America.

Jackson declined to name what member of Congress was undertaking a "study of feasibility of impeachment."

He charged the administration with sponsoring "state run terrorism" in El Salvador, and said Congress had been "steamrolled by the Reagan Administration" into providing aid for those activities

Hart's two-hour swing into Gary and East Chicago was the first Indiana visit by a major Democratic hopeful.

Hart told rank and file unionists in the nation's largestvolume steel-producing district that his policies will do more to revitalize smokestack industry than the "bailouts and handouts and Band-Aids" endorsed by their leaders and Mondale, a line he also used in Pennsylvania

WASHINGTON—Watter Mondale's income dropped more than $116,000 last year during his quest for the White House, while Gary Hart added nearly $8,000 and Jesse Jackson is not saying whether his carnings rose or fell.

A spokesman for Jackson's campaign said only the candidate's 1983 return would be released because that was the only one that had any bearing on the current presidential race

Mondale listed income more than double that of either of his rivals. In a joint return with his wife, Joan, the former vice president reported overall earnings of $316,330 for 1983, a sharp drop from the $432,679 he had the year before.

Hart's total income last year was $113,286, up by $7,812 from 1982.

Jackson, whose wife, Jacqueline, was listed as a housewife with no outside theome, reported earning $115,110 last year, including $63,078 in salary from his Chicago-based Operation PUSH, a self-help group.

WASHINGTON-President Reagan complained

Tuesday that the debate over his Central American policy has "strayed too far from reality"—that communist expansion in the region threatens U.S. security 'from pole to note."

Reagan, his requests for more military aid for El Salvador and anti-Nicaraguan rebels stalled on Capitol Hill, told about 100 Hispanic leaders at a White House lunch, "If Central America is lost then our own borders will be threatened."

WASHINGTON—The Supreme Court ruled unanimously today that immigration agents may conduct surprise inspections of factories to seek out illegal aliens.

The justices, splitting 3-2, also held that the Immigration and Naturalization agents may question individual workers about their citizenship.

In another key ruling today expanding police power, lthe justices ruled 6-3 that officers do not need a warrant to search an open field on private property. The court said the constitutional right to reasonable expectation of privacy, which prevents police from searching homes without warrants, does not apply to land.

The Standells: all this and more on Rhino Records

Louie, Louie, Louie, Louie....

MARK HINSON

Richard Berry, an obscure L. A musician, had no idea what he had created when he composed a simple three chord song called "Louie, Louie" in 1955. It has since become the most covered rock in roll song in history. Late last year the zany West Coast independent record company. Rhino Records, released the first in a series of albums called The Best of Louie, Louie (The Greatest Renditions of Rock's #1 All Time Song).

Best of contains ten versions (there is said to be over 300 recorded versions) of Louie<sup>1</sup> by such a wide range of artists as Rockin<sup>2</sup> Robin Roberts, Richard Berry (of course), Black Flag and The Rice University Marching Owl Band. The definitive rendition is by The Kingsimen

The Kingsmen from Portland, Ore, are responsible for diffing the song from cult status to national and international fame. The group heard Rockin' Robin Roberts' bluesy version in a bar one evening back in 1963. Each member vowed to learn it, but according to Rhino Records' exhaustive liner notes, only lead singer John Elymanaged the feat. Ely taught the song to the rest of his group except he accidentally taught it to them in a faster tempo than the original. The song proved wildly popular on their barroom circuit. One night they played it for a marathon 45 minutes to an appreciative audience, and the next day they recorded it at a cost of $50.

Success did not come quickly for the single (in the meantime Ely departed the group over a contract dispute). After airplay in the Boston area, the song made it on to the Billboard charts.

The song's big boost came late in 1963, when rumors circulated that somewhere in the Kingsmen's slurred version of "Louie, Louie" lurked vulgar words that could be deciphered if the record were played at slow speeds Sales skyrocketed, some radio stations banned the record, and the FCC and the FBI conducted an investigation into the lurid subject. Members of the Kingsmen were called in to testify. (The song actually concerns a reluctant sailor fixing to set sail. "Hey, hey, Louie, we got to go...")

The FCC and the FBI released their findings which stated that the song was "unintelligible at any speed." The rest is history No '60s bar band could complete an evening without pounding out at least one version of Berry's monster hit.

The song's popularity waned during the '70s but saw a grand revival when John Landis' homage to '60s frat life, Animal House, was released in 1978. As legend has it, John Belushi (aka Bluto) demanded that Landis include "Louie, Louie" in the film because Mr. Belushi was deflowered in the back seat of a car while the Kingsmen sang their signature on the radio. The song once again moved into its original habitat, the kinghell frat party.

The song's popularity continues to escalate even today Certain radio stations on the West Coast now hold "Lou-athons," playing countless renditions of the song hours on end. A "Louie, Louie" fan club has been established, its members say the song is "a way of life—the Louie, Louie Rebellion." And Rhino records is doing its part to keep the fever burning.

Since we're on the subject of Rhino Records

Recently, Rhino has been performing a needed duty as rock archivists. Although the label's claim to fame is its unending stream of novelty records (The International Elvis Impersonators Convention; "Looking Up Grannys Dress" by The Grandmothers, The World's Worst Records by Various Artists, which comes with a barf bag attached, Fish Heads—Burnes & Burnes Greatest Hits and many, many more wacky acts), Rhino continues to shed a belated spotlight on some of the '60s forgotten groups.

Its resurrection of protopunkers. The Standells is a godsend. The Turtles, The Bobby Fuller Four, The Box Tops, The Chocolate Watchband. Lightnin' Hopkins, Todd Rundgren's Nazz and Arthur Lee's Love have all been reissued by Rhino for a new generation to enjoy. Rhino also gives lip service to Phil Spector's early works with Goffin and King as well as others. And for anyone having a hard time procuring records by the Girl Groups, Rhino has a decent selection. Anyone interested can write to Rhino Records, Sears & Rhinobuck Catalogue, 1201 Olympic Blvd., Santa Monica, CA 90404.

R.F.M., Reckoning, IRS Records

I have to make my choice between all this and the rattling trucks on the American road. And I think I'll choose the rattling trucks where I don't have to explain and nothing is explained only real

- Jack Kerouse on his disgust with the literary "scene

Like Kerouac, R.F. M. are American originals. They have treated us for the past few years to an exhaust-obscured careen past Summerville, Ga and down mantra laden Highway 61 with a mumbled bit of rumors from Heartbreak Hotel and its inhabitants Flannery O'Connor, Hank Williams, Woody Guthrie and the Motorcycle Boy's rumble hungry gang. As Woody's gin-soaked six string used to proclaim, 1-This machine kills fascists.

It's hard to believe, but Reckoning is only the second album they've made. Last year's heroic debut, Murmur, followed hot on the heels of the ubiquitous Chronic Town FP and made RT M one of the most beloved and critically acclaimed new bands in a long, long time. Writers for the Village Voice, Rolling Stone and Record all placed R. I. M. at the top of their 1983 critic polls

Then came the relentless naysayers. You know. "Stipe mumbles because his lyrics are meaningless" and "They opened for the Police they've sold out" and on and on "rolling 1 2 3 4," rimshot, jerk and jar rhythm guitar, bass book and Mr. Stipe offers the perfect squelch Why you trying to second guess me who will be your book this season ooh who ooh. Here we are, here we are " So it goes with "Second Coursing sudden death? R E M 's Reckaning is that to the doubtets. As a Musician mag reviewer put it, "The only question of significance is how much better can they possibly Suffice to say that Reckoning contains ten solid songs. My favorite (after two days) is "(Don't go back to) Rockville," wherein R.I. M. finally and completely fess up to their most pervasive influence-country music. Stipe i mostly intelligible words summon the smokes dreams of the working class, wasted by years of honky tolks, factories and being where your true love wain't. "It's not as if I really need you 'If you were here I'd only bleed you

OUICK & DIRTY

'Rockville's' end is in the poignant tender mercy of a guitar figure lifted verbatim from "The Poor Side of Lown.

Welcome back to R.E.M.

Ricky Skaggs, Don't Cheut in Our Hometown, Sugar Hill Faic Records

It's no secret that American music is in the midst of a 'back to the roots" movement. One of its freshest and foremost proponents in country music is Ricky Skaggs

Skaggs has reordered country by bringing back the best elements of its diverse history and shaping them into a body of work that has won over both critics and fans and given the oft-feuding traditionalist vs. modernist debaters something, or at least someone, to agree on

Born in Kentucky in 1954, Skaggs was a child prodigs on a wide variety of traditional instruments. From age 15 on he played in a variety of bluegrass bands including the incomparable Ralph Stanley's, J.D. Crowe's New South and the Country Gentlemen In 1977, he did a stint in Emmy Lou Harris' band

His recorded solo career reads like a lexicon of root styles, including rockabilly, old-time brother-duet music, western • swing, bluegrass (of course) and the various permutations of mainstream country and honky tonk, all in evidence on his newest, Don't Cheat in Our Hometown

As on previous albums, Skaggs eschews the cloying "sweetening" of the pop Nashville sound, opting instead for the simple, crisp and mostly acousise rhythm punch he has been so influential in bringing back to the fore.

Everything on the album has strings or skin, including Albert Lee's electric lead and John Ware's drums

The Whites also figure prominently. The Whites (for those who don't know) are to Ricky Skaggs as the Carter Family is to Johnny Cash. Father-in-law Buck White nounds some mean piano fills while wife Sharon White Skaggs and sister in-law Cheryl White Warren blend close harmonies as only siblings can

Ms biggest complaint is that Jerry (Flux) Douglas lends his quick silver Dobro licks to just one cut-Carter Stanley's "Keep A Memory" Skagg's vocals, acoustic guitar, fiddles and mandolin wrap around songs by names as diverse as Mm-m mel Tillis, Bill Monroe and Lester Flatt.

Ricky Skaggs ranks on my fetish to-champion-with myfriends list, right up there with R.E.M. and Richard Thompson

If you buy only one country album this year or, better yet, if you've never bought a country album-buy this one.

Schnellenberger acknowledges the Florida House of Representatives Tuesday

UM, Schnellenberger honored by Florida House

TALLAHASSEE-The Florida House Tuesday honored Miami Hurricane football coach Howard Schnellenberger, whose team became the idol of underdogs by collegiate Minning the national championship in Januare

Schnellenberger said he has been praised almost every day from around the nation, but "it's always an honor to be recognized by your people back home."

The veteran coach presented a University of Miami shirt and tossed a teamautographed football to House Speaker Lee Moffitt, who made a nice catch of an errant throw to save the ball from banging into his

Schnellenberger said his team's accomplishment in bringing Horida its first major-school football championship was even more impressive in light of the funding disparity between it and the football programs at the University of Florida and Florida State procedure be required to enroll in an enrichment—that is, remedial remedial education-program administered by the proposed Office of the Dean of Undergraduate Studies

That office is not in existence at this time. but there are plans to create such a position within the year or two Furthermore, the athletic department would be required to report to the Vice-president for Academic Affairs and the Athletic Board on the academic progress made by each athlete admitted on an exception-

The committee also suggested improving student athlete academic advising procedures by placing them under the control of the proposed Dean of Undergraduate Studies Until that office is operational, however, control of the advising program would be left in the hands of the athletic department. The committee cited a "growing concern among faculty" about the advising program, reflected by the results of the faculty survey conducted by the committee.

Ingram was less than enthusiastic about the advisement proposal. He said he had discussed various advising programs with a variety of groups and they all seem to want

He noted that two years ago the Crators and Seminoles received a combined $15 million to upgrade their athletic facilities, while the University of Miami was spending $1,220 to renovate two bathrooms into offices for the coaching staff.

Schnellenberger said his team brought avelaim to the citire state by its stunning Orange Bowl upset win over top-ranked Nebraska.

"Our team in one day became America's team," he said "Every person that's ever been passed over for a promotion, every man that's ever come out of a cotton field or peanut field, was pulling for the Miami

In honoring Schnellenberger, Moffitt broke with his own commitment to avoid time-consuming recognition ceremonies on the House floor During the event, Tallahassee Rep. Al Lawson reminded lawmakers and Schnellenberger that his own alma mater, Florida A&M, captured the Division 1-AA crown in 1978.

what "is in our program right now

"There have been some pros and cons both ways," said Ingram. "We're willing to discuss it. We've got a special time problem and (the athletes') schedules are such that I think it would take a lot of handle advising coordination (to differently) "

The committee found no evidence of the existence of "eligibility" majors-that is, departments which extend academic favors to athletes. After a look at more than 110,000 course sections taught at FSU since 1977, the committee found only one instance of a professor who significantly inflated the grades of athletes

No evidence was found to indicate that professors were tougher on athletes either, as head football coach Bobby Bowden, just over a year ago, suggested occurred.

Committee researchers compared two groups of students-250 of them athletes, 250 non-athletes-matched by SAT scores, gender, race and academic major. They found no major difference in GPAs for the groups. The non-athletes had an average GPA of 2.66 while the athletes averaged

Though the graduation rates varied

Book traces Dupree's endless journeys

The Courting of Marcus Dupree by Willie Morris (Doubleday, $15,95)

BY CAROLYN CLICK

If there was a problem with Willie Morris' The Courting of Marcus Dupree, it lay in the fact that the 19-year-old running back from Philadelphia, Miss, could not quite make up his mind just who would be the proper suitor.

But while the fleet-footed Dupree moved from Oklahoma to the University of Southern Mississippi-and now onward to the USFI -- Morris' account of his wooing remains a moving testimony to the endurance of certain Southern myths and the disintegration of others

It is perhaps fitting that Morris-a native Mississippian-should chronicle the drama of Marcus Dupree, a black son of the new South-

Morris is a believer in the sustaining and nurturing qualities of the Southern region-of independence and tradition and family. But he has also been an unapologetic observer of the South's dark underbelly of racism and

Morris sees Dupree as a symbol- and perhaps a young redeemer-for this particular part of the South, a town called Philadelphia, Miss., in the red-clay heart of Neshoba

Morris stretches the analogy at times, sometimes seeking racial Dupree Overtones in the story that are not all that apparent That is perhaps the most serious flaw in Morris' weighty tone.

Dupree was born in the hot and haunted summer of 1964 just one month befor three civil rights workers- Michael Schwerner, Andrew Boddman, and James Earl Chaney-were gunned down for their activities and buried under a dam seven miles from his birthplace

The brutal killings and the trial of 18 men, including the town sheriff, deputy sheriff and the Imperial

BOOKS

Wizard of the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, propelled Philadelphia into the national spotlight

The repercussions from that terrible period spawned what Morris calls "a brooding introspection" in the soul of Philadelphians, who were forced to participate in the agonizing process of integration without a blueprint to

"Was the white community using him? Or did the truth go further - that the parents, students, teachers, teammates there had intuitively adopted him? Was there a need for expiation in the town? And was he saving its soul?

It was the combination of sport and sociology that prompted Morris to journey with the young Dupree - already being compared to the legendary Herschel Walker-through his final year of high school

Morris finds in Dupree's story a saga of leavetaking analagous to his own

"This tale had come full circle for me," Morris writes "Almost 30 years ago, I too, at age 17, had left a small town in Mississippi, and everything I ever knew and cared for and honored, for another, strange teeming university of the American Southwest."

There are allusions to the problems that would crop up during Dupree's sophomore year at Oklahoma-his disputes with Coach Barry Switzer, and the (in Morris's estimation) unfair portrayal by Sports Illustrated of Dupree as a lazy, overweight prima donna

But Morris leaves the conclusion of the story to Dupree himself

Morris makes no apologies for finding something more inside the heart of the young running back thrust too early into the glaring spotlight of national sports

Lady 'Noles sweep FAMU

BY DAVID LEESIMMONS

Playing in town for the first time since Mar 23, the Florida State softball team swept a doubleheader Tuesday from Florida AAM at FAMU's field

Florida State upped its record to 39.5.2. while FAMU finished its season at 4-31

FSU head coach JoAnne Graf sat out number one pitcher Tina Kyler in the first game, instead starting Shelley Berube against the Rattlerettes Berube had few problems, striking out eight as the Lads Seminoles cruised to an 11 I victory in us IDDIDES

"Tina really didn't need to pitch against them (FAMU), Graf said after the doubleheader "We were trying to give our younger players some experience

Freshman Monica Lawfield started the second game for the Lady 'Noles, and fanned eight while only allowing three batters on base as FSU beat FAMU again, widely between sports as high as 75 percent for softball and as low as 28.6 percent for football—the overall rate of retention and graduation for student athletes compared favorable with the student body as a whole. The average graduation rate for all male first-time-incollege students was 18 percent according to the report

'It shows that the situation for student athletes is not all that special," said Sandon "Taken as a whole, they're better than our student body as a whole. Our retention rate (overall) is unacceptable."

Ingram said he was pleased with the overall indicatons of the retention and eraduation rate study. He said he expected the graduation rate for football players to one in the future

"We feel like we've made a better effort in the past couple of years to recruit better students," said Ingram. "We also feel there will be a real big jump when the core curriculum requirements (for high schools) take affect

Those requirements would not allow students in high schools to avoid certain subjects and thus enter college unprepared said Ingram. He also pointed out that studies done by the College Football Association show an increase in the graduation rate nationally

In the area of scheduling and practice, the committee suggested FSU abide by the proposal fixing a maximum number of contests per season per sport voted upon but defeated, by the January, 1984 NCAA convention. That proposal would limit baseball to no more than 25 games, basketball to 28, football to 11 and softball to 60. Of the other sports programs at FSU cross country would be limited to no more than nine dates of competition, golf to 30, swimming to 24, tennis to 35, indoor/outdoor track to 24 and volleyball to 50

The committee also recommended that no student athlete be allowed more than nine absences per course because of competition or practice. A list of FSU teams that have required more absences than this maximum, according to the committee, include women's tennis, cross country, volleyball, golf and diving, and men's tennis, track and field, golf, baseball, basketball and cross country

As regards housing, counseling and health services, the committee recommended that the practice of housing athletes in a central location be discontinued. At FSU, unmarried members of the football team are required to live at Coble Terrace Apartments, run by the Seminole Boosters

In a committee survey of student athletes, 50 percent of the white football players who responded said they would prefer decentralized housing, 63 percent of black football players expressed the same preference.

If centralized housing is continued, said the committee, it should be staffed in a manner similar to other university housing under the direction of the Division of Student Affairs Junior and senior athletes should be allowed independent housing choices, according to the committee. Many student athletes feel isolated from the rest of the student body, the report states

Both Shger and Ingram say they oppose the decentralized housing recommendation

Sliger said he did not believe! we should immediately abandon our present housing of football players in an athletic He said he supported the dormitory " recommendation concerning the staffing of such housing, however

"It was something the administration was comfortable with then (1976, when Bowden took the coaching reins) I don't think they shouldn't be comfortable with it now," said Ingram. "It's a pretty smooth-

Assistant football coach Baker told why some coaches favor housing athletes together

Practice sessions put student athletes on a different schedule than other students, Baker said. By the time an athlete finishes practice and returns home, he said. students who are not athletes might have already finished their studies. It's easier to study if everyone's on the same whedule, he

It's also easier to keep track of athletes for meeting and training purposes when they all live together. Baker said. He noted that Coble Terrace is located next to the FSU fieldhouse and is therefore especially

Overall, Sandon said he is pleased with the report. "I would expect most of what we recommended to be implemented." he said. "with the possible exception of the athletic dormitors policy. The President has already suggested it's problematical and the coaches feel it is very important to maintain central housing for the football

"These recommendations will be implemented so long as responsible people in the university keep them up front in terms of goals and policy," Sandon said There needs to be a smaller version of our committee somewhere down the line to monitor the progress made

The committee members were Sandon. professor of religion and chairman of the American Studies program; Daniel Boroto, associate professor of psychology; Robert Conners, research associate for student affairs; Bob Goin, assistant athletic director. Jim Haves, dean of student development, James Jones, chairman of the history department; Robert Miller, executive director of the Seminole Boosters: Barbara Palmer, women's athletic director; Sherrill Ragans, director of resident student development; David Rasmussen, economics professor; Stephen Rollin, chairman of Human Services and Studies; Robert Singer, assistant dean of Movement Science and Physical Education, A. Delones Sloan, acting director, Student Counseling Center, and Lance Williams, president of the Black Student Union

A preliminary report indicated that the UH-1 precautionary landing was made as a result of ground fire which struck the confirmed both aircraft were hit

"The helicopters that the senators were on apparently did not go back up because one of the shots fired did strike the rotar, the blade" of the helicopter, Chiles said. The other craft apparently was not forced to land

The Pentagon said the senators' helicopter landed about 55 miles west of Tegucigalpa in Marcala, Honduras. Both senators were on the chopper when it landed and the passengers returned by helicopter to the Honduran air base at Palmerola

The state Department in Washington confirmed the reports

The senators were scheduled to visit the refugee camps and inspect U.S. built military installations, where American military personnel are stationed as part of controversial joint mane ivers with the Honduran army

The embasss spokesman said that Diana Negroponte, wife of U.S. ambassador John Negroponte was accompanying the senators and at least two aides in the two-chopper tour, but it was not clear if Negroponte was aboard the helicopter that came under fire

Chiles, ranking Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee, and Johnston both called their wives at home to tell them that thes were unhurt, their offices said.

A staff aide to Johnston said the senators left Sunday planning to visit Ll Salvador. Honduras, Panama and Nicaragua

The senators were accompanied on the trip by two staff members, one from the Senate Budget Committee and one from the Senate Appropriations Committee Johnston and Chiles serve on both panels

F fraternity rape charges prompt Senate action

The Senate, alarmed by reports that six University of Florida fraternity men gang-raped a teenaged freshman, voted Wednesday to make it easier for colleges to expel

Sens. Betty Castor, D. Tampa, and George Kirkpatrick, D-Gainesville, amended a routine prison administration bill to remove campus rules from the Administrative Procedures Act. Under the amendment, any rule applying to only one institution - whether a prison or college campus - would not be reviewed under the APA if the institution has its own method for affected employees or residents to appeal

Sen Dick Langley, R-Clermont, said he sponsored the bill (SB 131) so prison inmates could not tie up the Department of Corrections with years of administrative hearings over such matters as how many pair of socks an inmate can have, or where visiting rooms are located. The Castor-Kirkpatrick mendment expanded the bill to include campus rules

Sen Castor, a feminist long active in rape legislation, said the amendment was prompted by the UF investigation of a September incident in the Pi Lambda Phi fraternity house The Alachua County state attorney's office said no criminal charges were filed against six young men accused of forcing a 17 year-old girl to have sex after a fraternity party, and UE officials said they could not suspend them because of state administrative hearings

The fraternity men claimed the girl, who sought to become a fraternity "little sister," agreed to have sex with them. The case caused a series of protests by feminists at the university.

"As of this time, no action has been taken in this case," said Sen Castor "I think that students attending a university are attending as a privilege. This amendment would go a long way toward giving institutions the ability to react quickly, while still protecting the rights of students."

Sen Roberta Fox, D-Miami, said students would not be dented "due process," because they could still appeal

"We are, in effect, allowing the universities to deal with their own disciplinary problems - including a situation in which a university is now impotent to deal with a gang rape."

Kirkpatrick, whose legislative district includes the huge university, said he cosponsored the amendment to clarify university authority to adopt rules - such as a ban on group sex in fraternity houses - without going through administrative hearings. He said the Pi Lambda Phi-incident posed "a public relations problem" UF might have avoided by disciplining the students - even if they had to be "The university could have reacted more strongly. The way it is now, it looks like we don't care - and that's not the case," he said. "But it's like in the prisons - we've got the jailhouse lawyer syndrome on campus and everytime they adopted a rule, some student could take it to administrative hearings just to mess up the system."

Miami husband charged with raping his wife

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

MIAMI — A Florida appellate court has reinstated criminal charges against a man charged with raping his wife while they were living together.

The ruling by the Third District Court of Appeal Tuesday was the first involving a husband and wife who had not already begun divorce proceedings

George Pallas, attorney for the alleged assailant, criticized the ruling and said it would "open the floodgates to frivolous suits between hu-bands and wives."

The appeals court rejected an argument by a lower court judge that a centuries-old precedent cited in a 1983 decision precluded the prosecution of a Miami man accused of attacking his wife.

Dade Circuit Judge Joseph P. Farina had argued sexual charges could be brought against the husband only if his wife had filed for legal separation or disorce before the attack. In this case, Farina said the victim had been living with her husband soluntarily when the alleged assault took place.

The three appellate judges disagreed, saying they could not find any indication that a "common law "interspousal exception" to rape has ever existed in the state."

The court said even if such an exception did exist, it would have ceased to be relevant after 1974, when the Florida Legislature repealed the common-law definition of rape and created the new crime of sexual batters.

FPIRG's fee collection system survives another direct attack

The Florida Public Interest Research Group won its latest skirmish with the Florida Legislature Wednesday when the House Higher Education committee defeated a proposal to change the group's funding system

The proposal, HB111, would have prohibited universities from using a negative check off to collect discretionary fees the fees students in state universities are free to refuse to pay. Under a negative check off, they will be charged the fee unless they specifically say they do not want to pay it Once paid, however, students can still get their mones back by asking the group for it.

FPIRO, a statewide organization that researches consumer and environmental issues, began collecting a $2.50 discretionary fee at Florida State University in 1982, after a majority of the university's student body signed petitions asking the Board or Regents to authorize collection of the fee under a negative check off. The system has since spread to other universities in the state system The fee system has come under attack in the Legislature every year since FPIRG first began collections at FSU FPIRG officials say their opponents try to attack their group by attacking its funding source

Rep James Hill, R Jupiter, who sponsored the bill to ban negative check off said he has no problems with FPIRC itself, or with the work it does. He simply doesn't like the negative check-off, which he considers coercive. He said he expected FPIRG could prosper under a positive check off system just as well

'(It's) like saying your professors are going to get paid if they're popular' -FPIRG chair

> Affirmative action is the best was to raise funds," Hill said.

> But FPIRG state chairman Bruce Ownby said the negative check off is vital if his group is to retain a stable funding base. A positive check off fee, he said, would "be like saving your professors are going to get paid if they're popular

> The committee sides with FPIRG. defeating Hill's bill 10-4

Wilder victim seeks immunity

LNIST DERESS INTERNATIONAL

TORRANCI, Calif - Tina Marie Risico, the 16 year-old survivor of Christopher Wilder's cross-country murder spree wants immunity from prosecution before she resumes talking to investigators, police say

Risico, who reportedly helped Wilder lure two of his victims after she herself was abducted, has "temporarily" halted all interviews with law enforcement officials until her attorney gets "official word" that she is immune from prosecution, police Sgr. Rollo Green said Tuesday.

Most law enforcement investigators have said they view Risico as one of Wilder's victims, not an accomplice, and said Wilder brainwashed her and sexually tortured her

FBI agent Mike Kogut said during Risico's nine-day journey with Wilder, she "ignored" at least two opportunities to escape because she was "in abject fear of decide whether there are crimes that have been committed that should be prosecuted

Risico was abducted by Wilder on April 4 from a Torrance shopping mall. She reportedly helped Wilder lure another teenager, Dawnette Sue Wilt, into his car in Merrillville, Ind., and helped him abduct Beth Dodge, 33, in Victor, N Y

Police said Wilder fatally shot Dodge and stabbed Wilt. Risseo was freed by Wilder in Boston last Enday a few hours before he was shot to death in New Hampshire

Salvator Martoche, the U.S. attorney in Buffalo who is investigating the Dodge shooting, said any grant of immunity to Rivico would be "premature.

"Based on the information we have, we do not have any basis to consider her anything but a victim, but that can change," Martoche said

Plus-minus system gets approval

PROMISTARE REPORTS

The plus-minus grading system got the nod, 29 24, from Florida State University's Faculty Senate yesterday afternoon-and should to into effect by Fall, 1984.

The new grading system had already been approved by an overwhelming majority of the FSU Student Senate on Jan 18, but yesterday was the last chance the faculty senate could vote to approve the measure in

Steve Edwards, president of the FSU Faculty Senate, said a plus-minus grading system is already in effect at 50 percent of private universities, and 50 percent of state universities with enrollments over 20,000

Getting a plus-minus grading system at FSU has been a priority of ISU Student Body President Tom Abrams and student government

Follow through

Florida State University has been quite proud of its athletic successes, and justifiably so. The Seminoles have had football teams ranked in the top 20, softball teams claiming back-to-back national championships, and record-setting track performances within the past four years alone.

Now there is something else Seminole sports fans can be proud of It's the report of the President's Committee on the Student Athlete, and it may be a watershed moment in collegiate athletics at FSU.

The committee, appointed by FSU President Bernie Sliger in March, 1983, conducted extensive surveys of student athletes and faculty members and listened to many hours of testimony from coaches, administrators and others associated with the business of collegiate athletics at FSU. The representative committee, comprised of faculty, students and athletic department administrators, made several significant recommendations to Sliger

Those recommendations included shifting control of student athlete academic advising from the athletic department to an academic department - the proposed Dean of Undergraduate Studies; limiting the number of exceptions to academic admission standards allowed the athletic department; and, allowing athletes to live where they wish.

Those recommendations have not met with enthusiastic approval by all parties concerned. However, they are based on thorough research and should be given thoughtful consideration by Sliger. And, where practical, they should be implemented.

Beyond the impact the recommendations could have is the importance of the existence of the report itself. With this study, FSU has set an example of self-scrutiny that other universities would do well to emulate. Scandals have rocked athletic programs across the nation. Universities can clean up their own programs, or have it done for them. Sliger's attempt at self-policing should be applauded.

Intercollegiate athletics in and of itself is not necessarily a bad thing. On the contrary. When approached in the proper manner, the effects of college sports programs can be beneficial to the participants and the community as a whole.

That's why it is so important that Sliger follow the report's recommendations, and create a committee to monitor the athletic department's progress.

FSU's athletic program has the opportunity to become a benchmark for universities across the nation. It is now up to Sliger to decide if that is to be the case.

Sliger defends FSU's safety record

An Associated Press story this week about the safety of women students at Florida State University has unfairly painted this campus as a place of near hysteria. It has understandably alatmed the parents of present and future students at Florida State. I would like to use this forum to respond to some of their concerns First, when

Christopher Wilder abuducted one of our students, she was more than three miles from campus in the parking lot of a shopping center The fact that she survived her encounter with this man is a great relief to all of us. but Florida State University can accept neither credit nor blame for any part of her brutal abduction and subsequent escape. Wilder, like Theodore Bundy three years ago, had a terrible impact on many communities, including our own. Certainly Miami was left reeling from Christopher Wilder's activities

Bernie Sliger

The story cites Florida Department of Law Enforcement Statistics about the number of rapes in Tallahassee. Admittedly they are far too high, but the percentage is very little different from those in other Florida cities. In 1983, Leon County had a population of about 162,000 and 105 reported rapes. In every other crime category listed, Alachua County exceeded Leon County, including murder, robbery and aggravated assault. Statistics can be found to illustrate almost any point one wishes, of course, but the fact remains that in 1982, there were three rapes reported at Florida State and only one at the University of Florida, However, in 1983, this figure dropped to two at Florida State and rose to three at the University of Florida.

I do not wish to create alarm in the minds of UF students and their parents, but it is obvious that this is a nationwide problem, not one confined to Tallahassee and its universities, as this story would have you believe.

Florida State University Chief of Police William Tanner said that, because Florida State provides greater security than other state institutions and

Tallahassee offers more support to rape victims than other communities, it is less traumatic to report this crime here. Some law enforcement officials believe the incidence of rape is not greater here but the percentage of those reported is higher

We are not ostriches, we know we must be ever vigilant in protecting our students and educating them to the dangers that exist. Here are some of the crime prevention programs we have on the campus of Florida State University.

*Blue Light Safe Trail. Twenty-one strategically placed telephones, identified by blue lights and connected directly to our police headquarters, provide anyone needing help a rapid means for requesting police assistance.

. Escort Service. Student Government, cooperation with the Department of Public Safety, provides an escort service to students who must walk through campus at night. It operates without charge seven nights a week, 7 p.m. to 12.30 a.m.

•CAT Vehicles. The use of Campus All Terrain Vehicles combines the versatility of foot patrols with the ability to cover a far greater area through increased mobility

Other measures include innovative crime prevention programs emphasizing personal safety, along with full-time residence hall security guards, regular checks of points of entry of all residence halls and the design and renovation of buildings to offer the greatest deterrence to crime

The administration, faculty, student leaders and the independent student newspaper have worked very closely together to promote these safety

These are just an indication of the activities we have underway to deal with campus crime, especially those crimes committed against women While we wish we could just wipe out all such abhorrent criminal activities, we know that they do exist everywhere so we remain sensitive and alert to trying to offer protection to our students. And we do take exception to the sensational writing of this one reporter (who lives in Miami, not Tallahassee) who has managed to create such alarm, and the false impression that Tallahassee and Florida State are more dangerous than other locales.

Thank you in advance for running this letter, which is addressed to all of our present and future students and their parents, alumni and friends of Florida State University.

Bernard F. Sliger President, Florida State University

A new, cheaper strategy

BY EARL C. RAVENAL

Disengagement from the defense of Europe makes sense only as part of a broad alternative conception of U.S. foreign policy and national strategy. Thus, we must start by testing our defense policies against harder questions about national security

This means, first, distinguishing sharply between the security of our allies and dependents and the security of our interests truly are-what are we willing to defend against all kind of threats. We can then draw back to a line defined both in terms of what we must hold to protect our sovereignty and what we can hold over the long haul

This would allow a cut in defense spending on the order of $120 to $150 billion a year But to do this we must change our national strategies and our foreign policy, for significant sums can be saved only by removing large units from the force structure. And this would make it necessary, at some point, to reduce our defensive commitments in the world

Specifically, instead of deterrence and alliance, we would pursue war avoidance and self-reliance

Self-reliance is a response to the dissolution of alliances, to nuclear proliferation and to the practical demise of extended deterrence. Our military program would be designed in the most restricted way to protect core values our political integrity and the safety of our citizens and their domestic properts. This indicates a much more restricted area than the one we are now committed to defend

With an essentially defensive stance, we would work toward compartmentalizing deadly quarrely between other nations. These quarrels become vital threats only when they are linked with regions or issues which touch us directly. So we would delegate defensive tasks to particular countries - and accept the results, win or lose. Over time, we would allow to dissolve all defensive commitments that obligate us to intervene overseas, including NATO

At the same time, we should encourage other nations to become self-rehant. In fact, some foresighted countries already discount U.S. protection, despite our formal obligations

We would defend against military threats against our homeland. That is not simply a geographical standard- we should not fix a drawing lines in the sand, however easy and understandable the exercise Rather we should be concerned to characterize correctly the nature and import of other countries, actrons or any foreign events that we might consider "threats

The other phase of our alternative strategy, war avoidance, is based on the fact that we cannot any longer manipulate or 'manage' conflict War avoidance thus invokes primarily, though not exclusively, our strategic nuclear component

We will always need a strategy that discourages direct nuclear attacks on our homeland, or nuclear threats which coerce our international political choices. But given the parity today between the superpowers' nuclear arsenals, our own safety depends on maintaining "crisis stabilits" - a condition where both sides have a strong incentive to avoid striking first. This must include an unconditional doctrine of no first use of nuclear weapons

Several recent proposals for no first use of nuclear weapons still insist on maintaining U.S. defense of Western Europe against Soviet attack. Unfortunately, the very fear that a conventional war in Europe would inevitably escalate to a global nuclear conflagration is an essential element in the 'coupling' or our nuclear arsenal to the local defense of our allies. The only way to avoid the consequences of this chain of escalation is to guarantee a self sufficient conventional defense of Western Lurope

Thus a consistent position of no first use of nuclear weapons implies ending our defensive commitment to NATO altogether Indeed,

DEFENSE BUDGET '85

Eighth in a series

all who hold this position without virtually guaranteeing successful conventional defense are, despite themselves, implicitly arguing for disengagement from NATO

We could defend our essential security and our central values with a much smaller force structure than we now have let alone what the Reagan administration proposes. Such a force structure would include eight land divisions, 20 tactical air wing equivalents and six Navy carrier battle groups, and a nuclear force of submarines and cruise missile aimed bombers. It would require 1.285 million men and a total defense budget at the end of a decade of about $154 billion in 1985 dollars In contrast, the Reagan administration's request for 1985 would require 2 166 million men and $305 billion

One doesn't need a micrometer to measure these differences and they will multiply enormously if we don't change course. The was we're headed, defense spending during the next decade will be $4.8 trillion. Under a non-interventionist policy, that figure would be $2 6 trillion

A final word remains to be said on "values" Frankis, I'm tired of hearing that American disengagement from the defense of Lurope would be a betraval of Western values. At best, there is a trade off of values.

On one side, there is the minuscule risk of losing part of Western Lurope to an opportunistic Soviet attack if we seem unlikely to defend. On the other, there is the equally minuscule but real threat of the nuclear death of our own country, and possibly of civilization, if we join in deterrence and deterrence fails

If those who suggest withdrawal are accused of having a hidden preference for local defeat, then those who oppose withdrawal can be said to have a hidden preference for nuclear annihiliation

Thus both sides in the debate accept some damage to important values. But only the NATO lovalists, in effect, are accepting a terminal event by pledging Washington, New York and hundreds of other American cities to save Germany How can such a commitment be described except as a matter of sentiment, almost of impulse? Surely, n cannot be presented as a matter of objective, strategic prudence, let alone a self evident moral proposition

Salvadorans claim the CIA trained them in torture

BY MAXWELL GLEN AND CODY SHEARER

WASHINGTON-For five weeks last winter, Allan

Nairn risked his life collecting interviews from current and former members of El Salvador's internal security forces. The result is not only a gruesome profile of the Salvadoran death squads, but also evidence of an extensive U.S. role in their birth and ongoing activities.

Nairn's story, which appears in the May issue of The Progressive, points out the disingenuousness of Reagan administration criticism of death squad atrocities. It adds insight, moreover, to the recent debate over America's covert war against Nicaragua

Nairn traces U.S. support for the death squads back to the early 1960s, when, with help from the CIA, the chief Salvadoran paramilitary organization, ORDEN, was born. In interviews, members of the security forces admit receiving training in torture techniques and other advice from the U.S. in violation of the 1974 Foreign Assistance

Act, which forbids the U.S. from helping foreign police personnel. (The administration would like to eliminate the restriction.) Naurn learned, in fact, that at least 10 members of the security forces were scheduled to undergo a training course overseen by CIA personnel in the U.S. this spring.

Such intensive cooperation leads one to wonder about recent public denunciations of alleged death squad organizers by Vice-president Bush and other American officials. As Nairn says now, the U.S. is only going after the "bad apples." and "sacrificing a few individuals to save the system" it helped create.

Illegal support for foreign police forces also falls in line with an administration given to disregarding the law elsewhere in Central America, as in the mining of Nicaraguan ports.

Recently, the Senate denounced the administration's recent terrorist efforts as if it had never supported them in the past. Of course, Congress has virtually mothered with taxpayer dollars the Nicaraguan rebels who are doing the administration's dirty work

That sort of hypocrisy may be evident in our official attitude toward the death squads. If we're providing El-Salvador's security forces with the tools to terrorize civilians, how serious can our concern be?

Did the US have anything to do with the ouster of Gen. Gustavo Alvarez, the former Honduran aimed forces chief of staff recently sent into exile? The indications are affirmative. John Negroponte, the U.S. envoy to Honduras, is said to have met privately with Gen Walter Lopez, Alvarez's successor and a close friend of the Honduran president, only days before the shuffle.

Panel kills attempt to bind judges

A House committee killed a bill Wednesday that would have made a jury's recommendation of a life sentence in a capital case binding on the trial judge, who can now legally impose the death penalty

However, the House Criminal Justice Committee approved another measure (HB 105) which would keep death warrants signed by the governor intact indefinitely The bill is opposed by Gov. Bob Graham, who said it could open I lorida's death penalty statute to judicial review

The committee voted 10-7 to kill legislation (HB 820) introduced by Rep. Jim Burke, D. Miami, to prohibit a trial judge from overruling a jury that had recommended mercy in a capital case

Robert Stone, representing the state aftorneys a sociation, argued forcefully against the bill, saving it would lead to new appeals in the cases of 14 inmates currently on death row despite recommendations from their trial juries they serve life

You're taking a step toward having the death penalty law declared unconstitutional" if you pass the bill, said

Sen. Edgar Dunn, D Ormond Beach, came from the other side of the Capitol to speak for the bill. He said he helped draft the 1972 death penalty statute that was upheld four years later by the U.S. Supreme Court, but felt even then a jury's recommendation should be binding on the

However, Dunn noted that only three states, including Florida, allow a judge til overrule a jury. It has happened 82 times in Florida, and only 13 of the death sentences have

Jury bias bill fails

LNITED PRESSORTERNATIONAL

A controversial measure that would prohibit attorneys from striking groups of blacks or other minorities from trial juries was approved Wednesday by a House committee

The bill (HB 91), was introduced by Rep. Jim Burke, D. Miami, after uproar in Dade County that all white juries ended up acquitting policemen in two racially charged murder cases

The measure would create a presumption of discrimination if either prosecutors or defense attorneys use three fourths of their preemptive challenges to strike members of an identifiable minority group from a jury

Proponents say the bill outlaws institutionalized racism in the legal system. Opponents charge it will weaken the jury selection system and may be unconstitutional

"Do we or do we not allow formalized racism?" Burke asked the Criminal Justice Committee before its 11-5 vote in his favor. "We have to eliminate the issue of race" from the judicial system

Rep Hamilton Upchurch, D.St. Augustine, said attorneys have to be given the benefit of the doubt in trying to weed out prejudiced jurors

"If this bill is adopted, it's going to result in substantial trial delays," he said "It's going to, in my opinion, substantially weaken the jury selection procedure

Burke read a letter from a justice in the California Supreme Court who said a similar law in that state has almost eliminated charges of racism in court

Upchurch also claimed the bill would open a new avenue of appeal for inmates on Florida's Death Row who were convicted under the old law allowing preemptive challenges for any reason

"You're not going to stop the practice," he said, "Lawyers will get around it, even if you pass it

Mondale the favorite in Missouri caucuses

UNITED PRESSINTERNATIONAL

With Walter Mondale the favorite, Missouri Democratic leaders fooked for a heavy rank and-file turnout Wednesday night at hundreds of party caucuses where 75 Democratic National Convention delegate seats were on the line

The former vice president wound up a short break from campaigning with a quick visit to Kansas City to appear on a statewide public television news conference

Democratic presidential rivals Gary Hart and Jesse Jackson, who worked Missouri while Mondale rested earlier in the week, went on to Ohio, Texas and North Carolina, all with permaries and caucuses in the first week in May

Pat Lea, the Missouri Democratic chairman, said he hoped as many as $0,000 participate in the caucuess—more than four times the turnout four years ago. Lea predicted Mondale would win $0 to $5 delegates, with Hart and Jackson dividing the rest.

United Press International's delegate tabulation shows Mondale with 1,083 of the 1,967 needed for the party's presidential nomination, Hart 589 and Jackson 158 Another 309 are uncommitted

Hart talked with Ohio Gov Richard Celeste, whose original candidate,

John Glenn, dropped out and gave a speech on rebuilding the nation's public facilities. He said the meeting was "very cordial," but indicated he did not expect endorsement from the Ohioan

"We cannot hope to have a viable economy when our infrastructure continues to deteriorate," the senator from Colorado said in a speech at a city bridge that was closed as unisafe in 1978. "We must put the country back on the course of reinvesting in the public interest,"

Hart called for creation of a special capital budget separate from other federal expenditures, a commission to set priorities for rebuilding projects and establishment of a pool of federal, state and local funds to back rebuilding bonds.

The senator went on to Amarillo, Texas, where he said, "I think we need a president who has the leadership and courage to say 'no' to powerful unions' and to stem oil imports and military spending.

Jackson held a news conference in St. Louis, but cancelled a scheduled speech to the National Conference of Black Mayors Wednesday before heading for North Carolina.

Jackson said the cancellation was a scheduling problem and told questioners he had nothing to do with the absence of Muslim minister Louis Farrakhan at a Jackson rally Tuesday night in St. Louis "It was his own judgment," Jackson said. Farrakhan was to address the mayors Thursday.

Speaking of his campaign, Jackson said, "Many people are coming together for the first time now. We've won more states now already than Jimmy Carter won in 1980. We are going to stand tall in the context of our party."

Siege continues in London

I NITED PRESS IN TERNATIONAL

LONDON Libya allowed diplomats and their families to leave Britain's embassy in Tripoli Wednesday but Libyans remained holed up inside their London mission in a crisis touched off by a deadly burst of gunfire from the building.

The machine-gun fire Tuesday from the Libyan Embassy in London killed a policewoman and wounded 11 anti-Khadafy demonstrators. Dozens of sharpshooters sealed off the building, settling in Wednesday evening for a second nightlong vigil.

Libyan Col. Moammar Khadafy made hourly phone calls to the London embassy during the day, instructing the staff to remain inside, the Times of London quoted Libyan sources in London as saying.

ABC News, quoting U.S. intelligence sources, reported that hours before the gunfire erupted, a U.S. sps satellite intercepted a Libyan radio message instructing its embassy in London to "use force in responding to tainnts" by the demonstrators marching outside the mission.

The United States told British authorities about the message, but by the time Britain could respond, shots had already been fired."

"Twii representatives of the Libyan People's Bureau are coming in and out of the embassy," a Scotland Yard spokesman said. "We're still talking to each other as before. They are being fed as they want."

In the Libyan capital of Tripoli, police and "revolutionary students" had responded by surrounding the British Embassy, frapping 25 people including Ambassador Oliver Miles and II women and two children.

Late Wednesday, a Foreign Office spokerman in London said, "the Libyan government has said our people can go home" from the embassy in Tripoli

In a telephone interview with Independent Television

News, the ambassador's wife, Julia Miles, said, "We are allowed to go around the town of Tripoli quite freels, but we are not allowed to go beyond the confines of the town."

The diplomats' homes were still under guard, a British Foreign Office spokesman said. But British "very much welcomes" the latest developments, the spokesman said.

In the London standoff, Richard Luce, a junior minister at the Foreign Office, met for 40 minutes with Muftah Fitouri, an accredited diplomat at the Libyan Embassy

Fitouri, listed as a second secretary at the embassy, was not in the building when the shooting occurred

The meeting was "amicable" a Foreign Office source said. Luce repeated Britain's stand that security was the first duty of the police and they wanted to search the building Britain wanted no more bloodshed, he said.

"We ask them to come out peacefully and thus enable us to go in and search for weapons and explosives," Luce said. He hinted that progress had been made, saying the Libyans had "expressed regret" for killing the policewoman.

Police said between 20 and 30 Libyans were inside the socalled Libyan "People's Bureau" in London.

Farlier, the Libyan government called for British police to end the London siege and "to allow the employees of that uffice to circulate freely." Col. Moammar Khadafy's government has yowed revenge if the embassy were stormed.

British police said negotiations over the London standoff were "proceeding slowly, calmly and patiently" Police spokesman Richard Wells said a Libyan intermediary was helping in the talks

Fresh supplies of food were allowed in and it was ingredients for a Middle llastern meal to be prepared according to Islamic customs. Wells said. The provisions included lamb, fruits, eggs, organetts and detergents

WASHINGTON—The United States would consider military a tean against Libva. Syria or Iran if there were hard evidence of a planned terrorut attack against American targets, a State Department official said Wednesday.

The official spoke to reporters at the department shortly after Secretary of State George Shultz told White House correspondents, "It is essential for us to take all of the defensive measures that we gain, that are appropriate for the posters."

The State Department official, who asked not to be identified, said. "If we had hard information of impending terrorism, we would seriously consider taking action, preemptive action. This administration is not in a mood to do nothing.

Concerning the possibility of concerted action against Libvan President Moammar Khadafy, Shultz said, "Oh, I can envisage it. And I think it is important to recognize that the problem of terrorism is an international problem. It takes place somewhere, but it has broader dimensions to

When Shultr was asked how serious the "Khadafy problem" is, he replied, "It's obviously a serious problem and we have said so for some time, and I think the illusions that others have held, they are perhaps beginning to lose."

Graham plans $98 million land buy

1 NETS D PRESS, 12 TS RS 4 THOSA 1

Florida plans to buy 164,768 acres of the Everglades for $98.7 million, a transaction Gov. Bob Graham Wednesday called the largest purchase of environmentally sensitive land in state history

The proposed acquisition, part of Graham's "Save Our Everglades" plan, is designed to allow for the conversion of Alligator Alley to a four-lane, environmentally acceptable extension of Interstate 75

The $98.7 million purchase would involve only $15.9 million in state money, with the balance to come from the federal government. Graham said at a news conference

"The federal Department of Transportation has agreed to provide interstate highway funds," said Graham "And the Department of the Interior has agreed to ask Congress for its share of the expense

The state share would include $5 million in Department of Transportation money, already budgeted for 1-75, and $10 Lands fund

Graham said the owners of 65 percent of the desired land, Collier Enterprises and the Barron Collier Co., "have agreed in principle" to the plan. Acquiring the other 35 percent may require approval by the Legislature to use the state's power of eminent domain, he said

The new highway will be constructed to provide for free water flow underneath, unlike Alligator Alley Graham said it will also include "special passageways, to permit animals such as the endangered Florida panther to roam freely over their natural range

Graham called the proposed buy in Collier and Broward counties the largest purchase of environmentally threatened land in state history. The eastern section is composed of 127,758 acres northeast of Big Cypress National Preserve, adjacent to the Big Cypress and Miccosukee Indian reservations.

House, Senate said 'close' on measure to protect wetlands

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Senate and House positions on a landmark wetlands protection bill are very close and agreement on the decade-long argument in likely within the next few weeks, a House er said Wednesday.

Meanwhile, senators visited St. Mark National Wildlife Refuge south of Tallahassee to examine some wetlands

House natural resources chair Jon Mills said he had reached agreement with his Senate counterpart, Sen. Pat Neal, D-Bradenton, on the key issues of wetlands

But a conv of a bill filed by Neal late Tuesday-with 29 of 40 senators listed as co-sponsors, indicating it will pass quickly—included several differences from the House

A major difference is that the House measure lists more than 300 kinds of plants that are used to determine what is a wetland, and, therefore, will come under stricter state control. The Senate version does not list the plants

Staff members of the House natural resources committees still were examining the newly filed Senate bill Wednesday for differences from the House version.

Those differences will be worked out in a conference nittee. But Mills said, "We have basically have had the nference committee (already).

"Last year we were very far apart from the Senate." Mills told representatives who attended a meeting Wednesday to get information on the bill. "That's not the Mills was referring to the Water Quality Assurance Act of 1983, which was passed to protect the quality of groundwater. It required 42 meetings of a conference committee to hammer out an agreement on widely divergent House and Senate bills.

Also last year, as in many years since the mid-1970s, wetlands protection bills were proposed but never picked up much momentum.

Both bills attempt to give the state Department of Environmental Regulation more power to regulate metlands. Wetlands are considered important because they filter water as it moves towards lakes and rivers, serve as a ome for fish and wildlife and act as water storage areas during droughts.

The House measure faces a hearing in the House finance and tax committee and then is to go through the ppropriations committee, possibly as early as next week,

The student conceived and produced film 609 Herbert Street has its premiere showing today at 5.45 p.m. at the Cinema n Drafthouse. A horror film, it stays true to its genre's traditions with blood and plot twists. A couple of scenes appear almost to be hommages to such films as Psycho and Halloween, but it's hard to say for sure Filmed with super 8 film, it's a silent flick but don't let that keep you away. You do find yourself wishing for a bit of dialogue in a scene or two, but for the most part the story flows along unhampered by its silence. Besides, a nicely put together soundtrack helps fill in the few slow spots. Produced and written by Danny Miller, 609 Herbert Street features Blair Tuchman Jabove. center) as one of three young women who move into an old house at 609 Herbert Street. Also featured is Peg Turner in a dual role as an old woman who doesn't seem to particularly like youngsters and as a nosy Herbert Street neighbor

The film runs about an hour in length and only costs a buck to see. Why not check it out and support your local student filmmakers?

Jackson undergoes laser surgery for burn injury

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

CLLVER CITY, Calif - Pop superstar Michael Jackson underwent an 80 minute bloodless laser surgery Wednesday to repair his damaged scalp, burned during the filming of a Pepsi Cola commercial

"Michael is doing fine," plastic surgeon Steve Hoefflin said." We were able to cover the area using his own hair, he did not need any implants or transplants

Dr. Hoefflin told reporters after the surgery at Brotman Medical Center that Jackson's scalp should be completely healed in several months and he should be able to perform during his scheduled June tour

The medical center has been deluged with hundreds of calls from Jackson's fans since he checked in Tuesday

"It's Easter week and the kids are home and that's all they have to do now, call for Michael," said volunteer Vera Kramer. She said Jackson's admirers are being told not to send flowers, although cards would be forwarded to the Gramms winning songster

"This has been quite traumatic, physically and emotionally, for him," Hoefflin said. "The operation was very important to him - to have a full head of hair withouth the necessity of wigs or other hair coverings. He wanted to get it over with "

Hoefflin said Jackson would have some discomfort during his recovery, but that once the wound heals there should be no scars.

The use of the carbon dioxide laser, a recent innovation for treating burn victims, meant there was no loss of blood,

The surgeon used the laser to remove the palm-sized burn from the back of Jackson's head. He said he was unable to statch the wound without having to first transplant or implant hair from other parts of Jackson's head

I haven't seen the family, but I called and talked to a family representative and told them Michael was fine," the doctor said. He added that although Jackson was expected to be released Thursday, he hoped to convince the singer to stay an extra couple of days

The back of Jackson's head was ignited by special effects explosions while he and his brothers were filming a Pepsi-Cola commercial in Los Angeles in January

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Nancy Reagan is taking to the air again to speak out on drug abuse among children. The first lady will co-host with Gary Collins a week-long series entitled "Our Children and Drugs.—What Parents Can do." Hour Magazine quoted Ms. Reagan saying her own teenagers made her aware of the dangers of drugs. "We were in Sacramento at the time and my husband was governor. We kept getting calls from friends who were having serious problems with their children and the ages were getting younger and younger." The series, televised by Westinghouse Broadcasting and Cable, begins May 14 in major cities.

Actor and film producer Michael Douglas gives his recipe for being on target with such hits as One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest and The China Syndrome. He told the UPI Radio Network how he had managed to pick so many winners. "I guess the answer is that I make pictures for myself really, and I hope my tastes are wide enough that people like them." Douglas, currently starring in Romancing the Stone, vaid, "I really have to be in love with a project. I mean in love, like you'd be in love with a woman. Because it takes too darn long to get a movie done, and—as opposed to a marriage—you can't get divorced two or three years into a film project."

The Italian-Corn fashion designer Jacques Bellini believes he finally has gotten Pop artist Andy Warbol into attre a bit more elegant than Warbol's traditionally work-out jeans Bellini said the artist dropped into his New York shop the other day and ordered a posh wardrobe, including a tuxedo. Bellini's clothes adorn an international set that includes Mikhail Baryshnikov, Cher, Dustin Hoffman, Lena Horne and Eartha Kitt.

When Richard Meier received the $100,000 Pritzer Architecture prize in ceremonies at New York's Guggenheim Museum, a reporter asked if he felt mid Manhattan was being overbuilt with "a terrible density of skyscrapers." Not at all, "said the architect, 49. "I don't think it's overcrowded at all. I like (Manhattan) just the way it is." Meier's latest design is the High Museum of Art in Atlanta.

The actress, singer and dancer Shirley MacLaine, who just won an Oscar, was asked by a reporter, "What next?" MacLaine answered, "Well, I've never ridden an elephant." She opens Thursday night in New York in a one woman show, "Shirley MacLaine on Broadway," and there are reports when the curtain goes up, the actress will be atop one of the huge beats. Ringling Bros. Barnum Bailey, now appearing at Madison Square Garden, said if Nancy didn't dream, until.

Shirley wanted to ride an elephant, the circus is willing. A spokesman said "we have 22 elephants at her disposal."

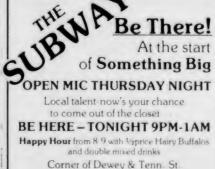

New York's popular Studio 54 is quite upset with rock 'n' roll star Jerry Lee Lewis. The club said Lewis, due to open Tuesday night, cancelled his appearance only three hours before showtime. Ron Crawley, agent for Lewis, cailed to say the singer was in Tennessee and could not appear because of a sore throat. Studio 54 is threatening to sue Lewis for an unspecified sum, although some early reports put the amount at $1 million. Legal heavyweight Roy Cohn is representing the clic Manhattan mightspot.

Liberace is breaking all records with his glitters engagement at New York's Radio Cits Music Hall, topping superstar crowd pleasers Bette Midler and the bubble gum rock group Menudo "It's really a great show — even though the hall is so massive, the performance is intimate," said Neil Friedman, publicity manager for Radio City Music Hall Liberace, known for his spangled white tuxedo, crystal candelabra and toothy smile, began a two-week engagement Sunday night and will continue through April 29. Based on advance ticket sales, Laberace is expected to grows $1.7 million for the engagement, breaking Midler's record for a weeklong stint of $1.4 million, Friedman said.

Curing that case of 'Basketball Jones'

BY FRED LENHOFF

Eight O'Clock on a Friday night, and you've got a strong Baskethall Jones coming on. After watching the break dancers in the Union on Thursday, you need to move, and none of this uncool suck-smoke jogging on Pensacola Street either Since you can't dance, much less break dance, you decide on backetball

Searching your drawers for socks sums holes, you find none forced to choose between clean dark socks or threadbare white ones, you choose the latter - with basketball, it's fashion over function

At the courts, you find a five-on-five game taking place among ten black youths who race up and down the court like greyhounds. Usually, however, only half of them make it down, the rest hang back, rapping with the others at the far end of the court

One of the players, a stocky individual wearing levi cutoffs, is on a hot streak, having sunk a number of longrange jumpers in a row. Whenever he puts up a shot, his friend shouts "Zoooom" or "Doooom" or something like that as the ball nears the hoop.

Another tall rangy fellow with extremely long limbs slides around, obviously under the delusion that he is Akeem Olajuwon. He tries to block every shot or pass that goes by him, slamming the ball back at the shooter. Perhaps he could catch it, but he prefers to swat it

Their game is fast break street ball filled with lavups and behind the back dishoffs fast break dance ball. The only thing missing is a huge blaster thumping Art of Noise from the sidelines

On the other half of the courts, six Asian Americans are playing an intense if awkward game. A woman watches them from the sidelines, a kid on a tricycle rides around through the dirt, mumbling to himself

Halfheartedly, you begin to shoot at the only open basket - of course, it lacks a net, so you must chase your errant shots all over the place, and you don't get the esthetic pleasure of hearing a perfect shot swish through the cotton. Both the hoops at the full-court game are clothed in a net, the Asian-American hoop possesses a net, albeit a limp, tattered one, only your basket is bare

You wanted to play, not just shoot, but you are faced

3 STOOGES

CINEMA 'N' DRAFTHOUSE

with a problem of extremes; in short, the first group is too good, but the others, you feel, are too bad. You glance down the court and notice that one of them is wearing black socks! You wince

Soon, however, tiring of shooting, you decide to take your chances with the Asian Americans Tochoose sides, they gather in a circle and turn their hands up and down as someone calls either "heads" or "tails" in general, they speak their own language among themselves, translating occasionally whenever you ask them what they just said. It makes you feel a bit paranoid, but then you don't speak tive either

Play commences, and you instantly discover that they're much better players close up than from a distance. You have little trouble getting rebounds through sheer virtue of height, but you have trouble keeping up with your man, who dashes about unceasingly and shoots a mean jumper no style, but results. You feel ponderous and slow, you start to breathe hard, you can't seem to hit your shots Your team is losing.

Despite your flubbed shots, your teammates shrug their shoulders and smile with commiseration. You exchange names with some of them, forgetting them instantly

In the heat of the second game, one guy jams his finger, someone massages it for him as he grimaces. Later the same quasi-doctor mends a teammate's turned ankle with amazing alacitty. Pre-med, you think

As time progresses, you begin to acclimate yourself to their style of play, even as your breath gets harder and harder and you feel the premonitions of tomorrow's backache. Finally your seemingly inexhaustible teammates start to tire, all but two of them leave

The three of you begin a game of 21, but suddenly you are tired. However, you don't want to leave and take your basketball because it's the only one left.

Yet he who hesitates is lost, two more players show up, so now you're really stuck. Your feet are beginning to ache, and you don't really care who wins anymore, and you just want to go home and soak your head in the shower. But strangely you begin to have fun, everyone is playing real loose, cracking jokes, goofing off. Despite your best efforts you have fun

Players ambivalent about living in Coble

DAVID LEE SIMMONS

While many football players had not yet read about the report released Tuesday on student athletics at Florida State, some of them seemed opposed to the idea of decentralized housing A confidential survey of student athletes indicated roughly 50 percent favored such housing.

In the report released by a committee appointed by FSU President Bernie Sliger to investigate the status of the student athlete at FSU and what improvements could be made, it was recommended that FSU go to decentralized housing for athletes. Currently the unmarried members of the Seminole football team stay exclusively at Coble Terrace, located off campus and run by Seminole Boosters,

The committee cited a student athlete survey it commissioned in which a majority of athletes said they preferred not to live in housing comprised totally of athletes. In the same survey, 57 percent said they felt isolated from the student body.

Most of the players interviewed, however, seemed ambivalent about recommendation

"Sure, I'd like an apartment better (than Coble)," said

Hassan Jones, a wide receiver on the team. "But it's really not that bad."

"There are advantages and disadvantages to living in Coble," explained offensive guard Jamie Dukes, "Coble is one of the finest places in the country for football players. I know it can be a pain living offcampus and having to walk to class, but I'm willing to sacrifice the convenience to play football."

Living on campus doesn't mean not being in touch Hassan Jones with the rest of the student body, Dukes pointed out "If you're in class talking to somebody, or you're walking around with your friends in the Union, that's mixing in campus life, too.

John Bamber, also an offensive guard, pointed out other advantages to Coble Terrace. "It really is a great recruiting tool to get players to come here," he said. "And also, it promotes team unity. The only disadvantage I see is that you're sort of out of touch with the rest of the students. But it's not too bad.

Offensive tackle John Ionata said he would prefer not to live in Coble, though. "I would prefer to live outside of Coble; maybe like in an apartment close to campus." he said. "We see the same guys all the time, and we need a break, just to meet other people

"That's the only bad thing about it," said Todd Stroud, a nose guard. "It would be better if they mixed us with students. I like the situation as it is now, though. I like living with the rest of the team.

Most of the athletes realized that by living with the other students, coaches would have difficulty staying in touch. 'That way, they couldn't keep as close an eye on us as they do now, because now they watch us like a hawk to make sure we make curfew," Dukes said, smiling. "It would be a lot tougher that way.

Braves beat Reds in the 10th

CINCINNATI - Jerry Royster hit a two-out single in the 10th inning to score Dale Murphy from second base and give the Atlanta Braves a 5-4 victory Wednesday over the Cincinnati Reds.

It was Cincinnati's fifth straight loss. The Braves' record climbs to 4-8.

Murphy singled off loser Tom Hume, 0-2, and stole second. Chris Chambliss was intentionally walked and Royster followed with a ground single to left to bring in Murphy, who collided with Reds catcher Dann Bilardello at the plate and jarred the hall loose

Claudell Washington accounted for Atlanta's first four runs with a pair of home runs in his first two at-bat. Washington led off the game with a line drive homer to right and smashed a three-run blast to right in the second inning

Steve Bedrouan, 1-0, the fourth Atlanta pitcher, worked the final two innings to get the victory.

Trailing 4-0, Cincinnati pulled to within 4.2 in the second inning when Dave Parker doubled, Nick Esasky singled and Ron Oester delivered a two-run triple down the

The Reds tied it 4.4 in the fourth. Esasky walked, took second on Gary Redus' single and scored on Oester's single. Bilardello followed with a double to score Redus-

Home plate umpire Frank Pulli was forced to leave the game after six innings because of double vision. He was replaced by second base umpire Joe West

FSU to host South Alabama

The University of South Alabama baseball team will rekindle its rivalry with Florida State tonight at 7 p.m.

The overall series, which FSU leads 20-16, was discontinued a few seasons ago, when then Jaguar coach Eddie Stanky vowed never to return to Tallahassee, calling the fans and FSU "crybabies"

FSU and South Alabama will play one another three times this season on a home and home basis, two in Tallahassee and one in Mobile

South Alabama (31-11) will bring the second leading base stealing team in the nation to town; the Jaguars have swiped

157 bases on the year. Jaguar runners have only been caught 41 times

Lance Johnson leads the squad with 52 stolen bases. The fleet-footed center fielder has only been caught four times. He has carved out a 314 average

Pete Coachman leads the Jaguars with a 426 average. He has also pilfered 35 of 45 bases, second on the South Alabama squad

But the Jags lack power, with the leading home run hitter on the squad having hit a mere four

Probable starters for South Alabama are John Clark (1-1-3-21 era) and Greg Mills (1-0 4 45)

Amputee to run across USA

STED PRINCISTERS ATTORAL

MIAMI - Jeff Keith of Boston was getting his artificial leg repaired in Miami Tuesday so that he can run across America

"I want to show that disabled doesn't mean unable," said the 21 year-old Boston College student who lost his right leg to bone cancer on Christmas Eve 1974 when he was 12 years old

Several major business firms have agreed to sponsor the $600,000 "Run, Jeff, Run" event that is being promoted by the Miami office of Project Masters

Money raised during Keith's journey will benefit the American Cancer Society and the National Handicapped Sports and Recreation Assn

Keith's run from Boston to Los Angeles will be launched at a breakfast in Boston's Fancuil Hall on June 4 Keith will run the first mile alongside Sen. Edward Kennedy's son, Theodore "Tedds" kenneds Jr., who also lost a leg to cancer as a boy

Keith plans to reach I on Angeles in us months. He hopes to run 156 days, about 20 miles a day with 24 days off. He plans to stop several hundred times to speak at rehabilitation centers, hospitals and other such facilities

"We anticipate that he will use at least three prostheses (artificial limbs) during the run," said John Stewart, one of the specialists attending Keith

Keith said he was inspired by Terry Fox's "Marathon of Hope" in 1980. Fox began running across Canada two years after having his right leg amputated above the knee. He covered 3,328 miles in five months and raised about $24 million for cancer research. He died nine months later at age

Keith is an English major on the dean's hist at Boston College and a first-string goalie on the lacrosse team. He said he has been an athlete as long as he can remember

"Six weeks after the operation (amputation), my parents got me on the ski slopes," he said "they threw me right into sports. And that's what I really wanted to do, play sports "

FSU Volleyball Club wins tournament

PROMISEAST REPORTS.

The Florida State Men's Volleyball Club captured the Horsda Region "A" division championship in the regional tournament held in Miami last Saturday

The squad finished its season with an 8-5 record after winning the regional tournament for the second time in the last

Pedro Agosto and Clint Makino paced the Seminoles' offensive attack, while Bobby Krull played solid defense

FSU took the championship by defeating the University of Florida and a club from Daytona Beach during the all-day affair

The team consists of Agosto, Ruben Horta, Pete Jensen, captain Phil Jensen, kroll, Drew Leslie and Makino

Rose's commercial appeal fading

Pete Rose's fading baseball talents are taking the bloom off his appeal as a commercial pitchman. His late season fump last year cost him a $100,000 promotional deal for Burger King, and his agent has cut in half the $300,000 asking price for a Pete Rose national TV ad. The 43 year old Rose is nearing Ty Cobb's lifetime record of hits, but even that has failed to excite advertisers. As one marketing agent puts it "the world doesn't give a damn about I's Cobb '

U.S. strategy too ambitious, too expensive

BY JONATHAN MARSHALI

"What in the name of God is strategic superiority? What is the significance of it politically, militarily, operationally at these levels of numbers? What do you do with it?"-Henry Kissinger, 1974

Kissinger's questions cut to the heart of America's nuclear debate. Because when all the rhetoric is stripped away, one central issue divides the Reagan Administration from liberal critics of its arms control record: Does America need-and can it achieve-nuclear superiority?

The question is rarely couched that way. Instead we hear sterile charges that President Reagan is a warmonger or a fool, or stout defenses of the president as savior of the nation's strategic forces. Both sides wrap themselves in the language of deterrence, frustrating public understanding of what is fundamentally at stake

For the real question is not what hardware it takes to deter the Soviets, but rather what kind of deterrence this country should strive for. The answer will have immense impact on our arms budgets and long term chances of survival

Liberal critics usually see nuclear deterrence in all-or nothing terms, agreeing with dissident Soviet physicist Andrei Sakharov that "... a nuclear war cannot be planned with the aim of winning it. Nuclear weapons cannot be viewed as a means of restraining aggression carried out by means of conventional weapons."

In this view, superiority has no meaning in the nuclear age Any addition to our arsenal would only make the rubble bounce a little higher.

In the Reagan administration, the 'war-fighting' camp has gained ascendancy. For them nuclear "sufficiency" isn't sufficient; deterrence hinges on the ability to "prevail" in a 'prolonged nuclear war." That doesn't necessarily mean the Reaganites want war, rather they believe that being able to fight nuclear war is the best way to deter the Soviet Union

But deter them from what?

If you just want to defend the United States, then a small, survivable deterrent (like submarines) is all you need. But

Psychic says woman abducted by Wilder alive

SHEFFILD, Ala -Searchers using information a psychic provided on the whereabouts of a possible victim of sex-slayer Christopher Wilder checked out many cabins Thursday, but say they didn't find the right one.

Sheriff Buddy Aldridge announced that an abandoned cabin matching the description was located near the Tennessee River, but later backed off the statement saying the telease was "premature"

"That was reported and I should have sent the men out there to check it before I said it, but I didn't," Aldridge said. "I hate it that that got out, but of course, that was my fault

An unidentified psychic told the family of Elizabeth "Beth" Kenyon she was being held captive in a north Alabama cabin with windows on each side. The description also included a missing window covered with cardboard and an old well pump in the front yard

Aldridge said the cardboard-covered window and pump were among the traits missing in the cabin that led to the incorrect report

Kenyon, 23, a part-time model and special education teacher at Coral Gables, Fla., disappeared March 5, Her car was found abandoned at Miami International Airport.

She was last seen a block from the school where she worked by a service station attendant, who said she was with Wilder, an Australian born race car driver

Wilder, who died from gunshot wounds last Friday in abduction or murder of at least 11 women in several states

Authorities claim Wilder, who had relatives in the Birmingham area, lured his victims from shopping centers by promising them careers as models

Bill Kenyon told television reporters in Miami that a psychic said his daughter, a former University of Miami cheerleader, was being held against her will in a cabin 91thin 10 miles of Tuscumbia

Kenyon, of Lockport, N.Y., near Buffalo, arrived at the Muscle Shoals airport in north Alabama Wednesday to aid in the search

A friend of the kenyon family who asked not to be identified said other psychics also had said the women was in Alabama

About 25 searchers from the Alabama Forestry Service, Colbert County sheriff's office, county rescue squad and civil defense continued their search Thursday, directed by a deputy flying around the area in a TVA helicopter.

Aldridge said the search would continue at least through Friday

"We've got a lot to check out," he said. He said the search was the first he had conducted on a tip from a psychic, but he was "happy to do it "

"The family has a lot of hope and belief, and we will believe right along with them until it is proven otherwise,"

Politics sparked racial unrest

MIAMI-A preliminary draft report of a study by a multi-ethnic panel on the causes of the racial violence in the Overtown ghetto showed Thursday that city and county politics have been major contributors to the unrest. The study also blamed poverty, indifference by the private sector and media sensationalism

The panel was appointed less than a month after the December 1982 Overtown riots began when Cuban born police officer Luis Alvarez fatally wounded Nevell Johnson Jr., a 20-year old black, in an Overtown video game room. Alvarez was acquitted of manslaughter in the case last month, triggering more violence, although it was far less intense than the earlier disturbance

The panel of community activists, businessmen, lawyers, teachers, judges and politicians directed its attention to the 1982 Christmas holiday period unrest

They blamed animosity among blacks, Hispanics and non-Latin whites on "misuse of power manipulation of minority group conflicts" and "in-lighting of politicians

"Broken political promises. manipulation by elected and appointed officials and indifference on the part of others in the private sector have increased the levels of frustrations and community tensions to an explosive level as evidenced by the December 1982 civil disturbance in Overtown," a draft of the report said

'The hiring practices forced upon the Miami Police Department by litigation, community pressure and politics has changed the ways in which officers are selected and subsequently trained," the report said

Since the chief of police is responsible to the city commission and city manager, it is from these chambers and offices that resources are allocated and many final decisions about police work and training are made," the report said coverage, saving press coverage of police shootings "have been a source of media sensationalism for years," and also said the media "must react in a responsible manner and report the event in its total context and not as an isolated event. They should also attempt to cover events where police officers avoid force and reduce potentially violent situations into non-violent ones

The panel was also critical of news media

Cabinet reconsiders migrant aid

INTED PRINCIPLES ADDINAL

Drop out rates higher than 50 percent among migrant farmworkers' children should be addressed by private voluntary agencies as well as local school boards. Gov. Bob Graham and the Cabinet decided Thursday

The decision reflects a willingness on the part of Graham and the Cabinet to consider a statewide approach to the problem, said farmworker advocate Wendell Rollason

At Rollason's urging, Graham and the Cabinet adopted a change in a Florida plan to be submitted to the federal government The plan tells how the state will use federal money earmarked for migrant education.

Local school boards would have decided how to use all the money under a plan submitted by the state Department of Education for approval by Graham and the Cabinet, who also serve as the state Board of Education

Instead, non-profit voluntary agencies such as the Redland Christian Migrant Association, Rollason's group, *compete with school districts for $400,000 of the total $20.2 million.

"Covernor, the remark you made that maybe we should take a look at the statewide approach is right on target," Rollason said. "In individual counties there are exciting, different things going on But they are isolated out because there is not a

Graham and the Cabinet plan, at their next meeting, to confirm appointments to a statewide task force on migrant education issues. On a motion by Insurance Commissioner Bill Gunter, the board voted to instruct the task force to place a high priority on the migrant drop-out problem.

At a Cabinet meeting April 5, Rollason pointed out that the state's own figures show the migrant drop-out rate could be as high as 84 percent. State studies peg the rate at 55 percent, but the study has a 29 percent

He said the plan developed by DOI fur using the migrant education money was doomed because it was not comprehensive

Darts and Laurels

Laurel: To the Third District Court of Appeal for ruling Tuesday that a Miami man must stand trial for the alleged rape of his wife. The court dismissed arguments by the man's attorney that under an ancient precedent, a husband cannot legally be said to have raped a wife, even if there is no question that she submitted to sex against her will. In effect, that lawyer was arguing that when women marry, their bodies become the property of their husbands.

That's a barbarous notion, a reminder of the days when women had to show severe bodily harm—say, a broken bone—in order to demonstrate they resisted in rape cases. The disdain shown that defense by the court is evidence that we've made some progress, at least, toward equal rights for women. But it's a reminder, too, of the fact that for many women equality means freedom for physical assault—indeed, from fear for their lives. Think about that the next time someone wonders why feminists never seem to be satisfied with their lot.

Laurel To the House Higher Education Committee for leaving the Florida Public Interest Research Group and its fee structure alone The committee on Wednesday handily defeated a bill which would have banned the kind of fee FPIRG collects—that is, a negative check-off fee

The bill's sponsors said they had no problem with the type of work FPIRG does—research on consumer and environmental issues—but thought the fee coercive because some students pay it unknowingly by neglecting to indicate on their fee cards they don't choose to pay. There is certainly a chance such unintentional giving might take place, even though FPIRG customarily publicizes the option not to pay and provides refunds of the fee throughout each semester. We feel the good the organization does and the strong support it enjoys among Florida's students outweigh that risk.

Besides, bills similar to the one killed Wednesday have come up every year since FPIRG first started collecting the fee in 1982. As far as we're concerned, the issue should have been considered settled as soon as the student petition to establish the fee was handed to the Board of Regents. FPIRG is a valuable and a democratic organization. It should be left alone to do its work.

Dart: To the Reagan administration for its remarkable assertion that the downing of the U.S. military helicopter bearing Sen. Lawton Chiles and a colleague is "living proof" that the Congress should shut up and let Reagan pump more guns and bullets into the region. The incident shows, rather, what happens when a military aircraft belonging to a nation that has committed numerous acts of war strays too close to the enemy.

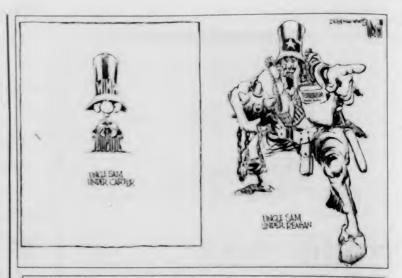

We agree with Jesse Jackson.

"While all reasonable people must condemn such actions (as the firing upon the helicopter), we must realize that now as ever, violence and lawlessness breeds even more violence and lawlessness. This administration does not need much of an excuse for invasions, bombings, and mining of harbors."

Gay services funds

ditor

I am writing to correct the record regarding funding for the Gay Peer Volunteers, now Gay Lesbian Support Services (GLSS) of FSU. In the March 19 issue, the article on the funding of the Student Health Center reported that the center's director. Mr. Scott Kent, indicated that gay peer counseling might be eliminated from the center's services if increased revenues from activities and service fees were not forthcoming to the center.

Mr. Kent apparently believes that the Student Health Center presently funds and has historically funded the gay peer counseling component of GLSS. This is, unfortunately inaccurate GLSS, and its predecessors at FSU, have provided peer counseling at FSU for the past 10.5 years without any funds from the center.

The center has provided in kind services, including space for FLSS's library for the past two years Dr. Lucs B. Kizirian, University Counseling Psychologist, has generously acted as faculty sponsor and psychological consultant for more than seven of those years. Though GLSS has benefitted greatly and is appreciative of these nonmonetary contributions and assistance, the organization is funded entirely through its own fund taising efforts and a supplemental appropriation from the student government. Gay peer counseling provides a vital service that has affirmed the right of gas persons as a part of the FSU community and assisted those with doubts to have a positive view when troubled by gay and leshian concerns

I would like to take this opportunity to thank this university, its faculty, staff, and students for their support and encouragement of Gay/Lesbian Support Services. We plan to improve our services and outreach to the campus and local community.

Slamming is fun

Editor

Congrats to Hated Youth and the slammers at the Downunder this last Friday night for creating the first successful (if short) slam event I've seen in Tallahassee. Slamming is about movement, fun and mutual support—not being jerks and elbowing people in the face. Thanks for keeping it the former, not the latter. As one participant put it, "It's more fun than roller derby!" Special thanks to Hated Eric for being responsible and helping clear the dance floor when a beer bottle was dropped. One thing, Eric. Stop making comments about "faggots." If a hardcore stance requires mandatory outrage, take it to Reagan, nukes, your boss, Billy Idol, or Mommy, someplace there mas be a real threat or grudge, not "fags" and Johnny Rotten. People like these, cleared the space you can act outrageous in If you want to suffer from trendy homophobia, keep it to yourself.

In reply to Mr. Brody's rant against the Purple Heads at Smitty's: Sure, some of us do miss the haleyon days in '81 when we had a real alternative radio station and the Slutboys, and are happy to see the Heads Sluts back. Sure, D.K. Roberts' review did emphasize who was wearing what and internal decor a bit over musical content, and she's actually one of those dread Flambeau people. What you seemed to miss from the review and the show was that the Heads/Sluts burned. If anything, they were (by garage punk standards) almost emburrassingly professional. If you want "technical proficiency," throw out the Stones and listen to Mozart! If you want slickness, there's a load of bands on the Strip willing to serve you Radio-MTV. When I go to see the Heads, I go for the fun of sloppy, loud rock and roll with spirit and guts, and to hear some of my favorite songs I don't get elsewhere.

To quote Charlie Pickett: "REAL rock'n'roll's so good! I'm amazed more people don't do it." Me, too. Welcome back, "Purple Heads." I'll see you at Smitty's Easter weekend.

Thank you

Editor

On Thursday, April 12, due to the "thoughtfulness" of an unknown individual, I lacerated my foot on a drinking glass left in the Adams Street Downtown Square. (No, I wasn't barefoot—my shoes were open at the sides).

I went to the University Infirmary. My saga is as follows: At I.451 was checked in at the desk, I was taken immediately in back and examined. I was given crutches and was next X-rayed. My foot was then soaked and cleaned. I received ten stitches and was given instructions for proper care of my foot. I left at 2:40. On Saturday, I returned for cleaning and a checkup.

What is "wrong" with my saga? Absolutely nothing. Throughout this entire incident I was treated with utmost consideration and kindness by competent professionals. I just wanted to write and say thanks

South Africa's stepchild

BY JOANMARIE KALTER

MASERU, Lesotho—The first thing that strikes a visitor to Lesotho is its look of prosperity. In this small mountain kingdom—officially one of the world's 25 least-developed countries—produce stands overflow, citizens are well-dressed, and gas is so plentiful that noonday traffic jams snarl the sunny streets.

But the visitor soon realizes that South Africa provides Lesotho with almost everything—all its power, all its gas, half its food. Geographically, South Africa has Lesotho, the vize of Maryland, surrounded. It is a ship in a stormy sea, but without the support of South Africa it would never stay afloat.

Bluntly put, Lesotho is a labor reserve and market for its neighbor. Fully 40 percent of the country's male workers are employed on South African farms or in South African mines. Their earnings, and rebates paid on imported South Africans goods, account for more than 70 percent of Lesotho's operating economy.

But Lesotho pays for its dependence. Officials here believe South Africa has political as well as economic motives.

The ultimate goal, they say, is to have Lesotho recognize the "homelands"—the reservations to which South Africa is forcibly moving its black population. As Information Minister Desmond Sixishe says, "We are the priests who would baptize South Africa's illegitimate child."

The "homelands" are the cornerstone of apartheid, and the South Africans believe that should Lesotho recognize them, others in black Africa and the world would follow.

Lesotho, independent since 1966, is treated as a child and is subjected to petty harassment. Last May, at the narrow railway bridge which links Lesotho to its neighbor, South African police stopped and searched every vehicle, carefully and slowly. Traffic backed up for miles, and Lesotho's supply of fresh food was choked off.

The South Africans say they were searching for members of the anti-apartheid African National Congress (ANC). But the slowdown also served as a pointed lesson in the country's subscrability.

Not all the lessons are so gentle. In a December 1982 raid on ANC nexts here in Maseru, 42 people—including 12 bystanders—were gunned down by the South African Defense Force. Lesotho was utterly powerless to intervene.

If Lesotho officials worry about their unequal bond to South Africa, they worry even more about losing it.

even more about losing it.

With increased mechanization of the mines and a new policy of hiring more South African blacks, helpless lesotho officials watch as employment figures ominously decline.

On Friday evenings, a long line of miners streams back into Lesotho on weekend leave. They crowd into buses, traveling far into the night down dirt roads, across mountains and ranges. These are the lucky ones who work close enough for an occasional visit home.

But even steady employment takes its toll. Eziah Mosesi has worked 30 years in the gold mines and sees his wife and teen-age son only rarely. "It's the same for everyone," he shrugs. "It will be the same for my boy."

The impact of such shattered family lives can be felt in the discos and casinos here in Maseru where crowds of lonely city women flock for male companionship. It can be seen in the mountain villages where women sow the land and raise their children alone, "Lesotho is a land only half alive," says Anna Moeketsi, whose husband farms in South Africa, "The men take our hearts and go away."

There is little Lesotho can do to develop its own economy. Billing itself the "Switzerland of Africa," the government has tried to attract South African tourists to its Hilton Hotel—but new "boundand" resorts have left the Hilton 70 percent empty. Lesotho also tries to lure foreign investment but has difficulty competing with the new incentives South Africa offers investors in its "boundands"—including wage subsidies of up to 95 percent for seven years.

A $2 billion scheme to divert the country's one natural resource—water—to irrigate South African farmlands may eventually double Lesotho's current annual revenue, but the money will not flow for another 20 years.

In the meantime, Lesotho denounces apartheid and tries to attract international aid. Here it has been successful—Lesotho is one of the largest per-capita aid recipients in the world. Paradoxically, many of the major donors are those Western nations most deeply committed to the South African economy.

As a result, white expatriate aid workers have now replaced British colonials as the elite class—dining in restaurants with names like Boccaccio's and Auberge, swimming in the Maseru Club pool. And where the Basothos once worked as gardeners and servants for the colonials, they now do so for the aid workers. From their point of view, one wonders whether much has changed.

While a country like Mozambique, with its agricultural resources and access to the ocean, has the far-off potential for self-sufficiency, economic independence for Lesotho seems impossible.

The Basothos have made some sort of peace with that. A black travel agent recommends South African Airways, "the most efficient service in the world," A black musician vacations in the homeland of Transkei, "the beaches there are really heautiful." A foreigner's political objections simply amuse them.

Yet being an economic ward has disturbing consequences,

'We may live in the armpit of South Africa, but it's a comfortable armpit. At least for now.'

Children beg on the streets, though clearly not in need. A manager complains his employees spend their paychecks in a day. And Anthony Phakoana of the Agriculture Ministry explains his difficulties in raising productivity.

"Farmers in Lesotho are just not interested in farming," he says. "They'd rather work in the South African mines and leave the land to their wives." And they, he said, are "not interested either."

A teacher from the National University of Lesotho passes on a local saying, "We may live in the armpit of South Africa, people say, but it's a comfortable armpit."

Then he grows more serious, and adds—"At least, that is, it's comfortable for now."

Library Day Landshdes of librarians on the outside phazza earing library paste clincken salad Inside, the mighty Florida Senate grinds to a halt as Cuttis Peterson makes it temporarily pass a bill dealing with due process (SB13) "cause we've had some people here waiting for a resolution for a long time..." The resolution for a long time..." The resolution from some Matt Langley Bell III, the Escambia Courty Tax Collector. I hope he's really called Matthew... it would be so appropriate Matt Langley Bell'y claims to apostolic glory are that he firitshes the mass mailing of tax forms ahead of schedule and he funded and wrote a nighty work of literary glitter... the tax collector's handbook (no expense to the fax paver, either)

Let's hear it for the boy. His pant-surted mama and his proud daddy, his chertleader-sque wife and two printrase haired young 'uns in there on Peterson's altar with W.D. Childers who always looks as though there's something jumps in his battery. Mait Langles Bell III is deeply moved. The press is suting there teading the Shopper's Drug Mait ad supplement from the Democrat and the box scores from the Herald. Wednesday of Holy Week and the Lected are once again straining at guats and swallowing camels and not even noticing.

Down front in the House, right under Allen Morris' vulnerable nose, is an easle with a something covered in one of those blue paper picnic tablecloths. And there's the entire Matthews family, ancient oligarchy of Bradford County, clustered about like a Van Dyke portrait. There are thousands of them. Their very number eclipses the Matt Langley Bell III brood with a vengeance. They are gathered here in solemn state to honor their ancestor, former (and apparently dead) Speaker Gene Matthews Democrat " He held the gavel in something like 1907 and did a number of other amazing things as we are told by Dovle Connor, a Starke native (he admits it openly) who cuts a Cabinet meeting to be here. Mr. Matthews edited an Ocala newspaper called The New Capitol whose editorial hobbyhorse was that the capitol should be moved from dragsville Tallahassee to fabitlous Ocala. In 1923, Mr. Matthews had intimate connections with preferential highways and was also president of the bank of Starke (doubtless where vour money sizzles). We are told that "newspapers were in his blood" (terribly uncomfortable) and, according to Representative Srd "Bull Gator" Marin, a man of Aquinas like logic, "he must've been right because he was duly elected many times." This is the Richard Nixon School of longevity - virtue

They whip the table cloth off the Mystery Object (or would you rather have what's behind door number three?) and o's he portrait of Speaker Matthews himself, a sunny-looking fellow with a ZZ Top moustache. No one knows why the portrait wasn't painted when he was still with us. Maybe he wasn't as Tom Selleck like as the picture suggests and it was better to wait until he was safely in Heaven before gulling the public with an idealization. What good is art if you can't lie?

In between aesthetic problems of ut pictura poesis and where to hang Speaker Matthews (does he go with the sofa?) the House accidentally debates a bill. HB191 has to do with the extent a corrections officer can beat the garbage

The latest moves by Libva came three days after an unidentified person fired a machine gun from the Arab nation's embassy in London, killing a British policewoman and wounding anti-Khadafy Libvan demonstrators in the street outside

In the broadcast interview, Khadafy blamed Britain for the shooting and said, British police forces and helicopters and armored forces must withdraw immediately and release our people there, nothing else "

Khadafy's demands came as a slap to the British government which, had been waiting since Wednesday night for response to a formal request for permission to enter the Libvan embassy, question about 25 radicals inside and search for guns and

House okays certain peeks at student records

INITED PRINCIPLENATIONAL

The Home Thursday voted to open student records to investigators who are working on discipline cases against incompetent teachers

The records check provision was added as a last minute amendment to a bill, which was approved 100-7 by the House and sent to the Senate

The bill (HB 1136) also allows credit bureaus to obtain some information from student records to help track down students with outstanding debts. Higher Education Chairman Walt Young, D-Hollywood, and Florida loses between $7 million and $8 million a year in unpaid student leans.

He said officials hope that allowing credit bureaus to get names and addresses from student records would scare the students into repaying their debts, rather than risk a bad credit rating

Young, a school administrator, added an amendment opening up student files for teacher dismissal or licensure

Young illustrated the need for the change by describing a recent Palm Beach County case in which a teacher was charged with altering grade reports in students' records. Administrators were blocked from using the records as evidence because of confidentiality laws.

"This would allow them to go into it," Young said

Rep. Tom Dawson, R Sarasota, opposed the change, saying it significantly expanded the purpose of what had been a "very straight forward" bill aimed at bad debts

Rep. Doug Jamerson, a St. Petersburg teacher, also objected unsuccessfully that teachers shouldn't be drawn into a bill dealing with student loans.

Officials said Young's amendment was aimed at getting rid of inept teachers, but said it might help in isolated cases against instructors who commit crimes

Teacher discipline has become a hot issue in the wake of revelations in the Winter Haven News Chief that dozens of convicted sex offenders, child molesters, drug peddiers and other felons have been certified to teach because they lied about their criminal backgrounds

Bill cracks down on guards who beat inmates

I STEED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

The House Thursday refused to go easy on prison guards who beat inmates, rejecting one lawmaker's contention that correctional officers shouldn't be fired if they commit just

By a 61-49 vote, House members defeated Rep. Wayne Hollingsworth's proposal to give officials more leeway in deciding whether to fire guards who strike prisoners.

Lawmakers then gave preliminary approval to a bill (HB 191) making it easier for officials to fire guards who maliciously lash back at harassing inmates. The bill will come up for final House approval Monday.

Under the Corrections Committee bill, guards would not be subject to firing if they strike inmates as an immediate reaction to being hit, spat upon or otherwise abused.

However, if a guard locks up the offending prisoner and later strikes him, "then we think he should be prosecuted, because he thought about it," said Corrections Chairman James Ward, D-Fort Walton Beach

"We're expecting him to be a professional"

Ward suggested officers might go home after a run-in with an inmate and then return to the prison to beat the prisoner, but Rep. Frank Williams, D. Starke and a former prison guard, termed that "a bunch of bull."

Castor, Margolis eye Senate presidency

BY JOEY LEDFORD

There's a chance the Florida Senate may soon be headed by a female president, 25 years after the first woman broke the sex barrier and won election to the one-time all-male hastion.

Two prominent women senators, Betty Castor, D. Tampa, and Gwen Margolis, D. North Miami, are waging low-key campaigns to succeed incoming president Harry Johnston of West Palm Beach.

If either of the two women defeat a handful of anticipated male challengers, they would take over the Senate in the 1987-88 session. That's exactly 25 years after Beth Johnston of Orlando became the first woman to be elected to the upper chamber in 1962.

Both Castor and Margolis are known as hard-working, progressive lawmakers. And neither is hesitant when asked if she wants to be president.

"I would be interested," said Castor, 42, an educator and former unsuccessful candidate for lieutenant governor "However, I think it's a bit premature."

"My main goal is the Senate presidency," said Margolis, 49, who has alreads recorded a first in being the Senate's initial female committee chairwoman. She heads the Finance, Taxation and Claims panel.

They are likely to be opposed by several male senators. Top contenders are said to be Democratic Sens. Ken Jenne of Hollywood, Pat Neal of Bradenton, George Kirkpatrik, of Gainesville, George Stuart of Orlando, Pat Thomas of Quincy, John Hill of Miami Lakes and Mattox Hair of Lakeland.

Margolis indicated, however, that she considers herself the front runner for the post.

"I'm certainly a candidate with a goodly amount of

REVIEW

Theatre fables give Loads of Laughs

MARK HINSON

I must admit, I was a bit worried on first arriving to see Studio Theatre's treatment of Aesop and the Brothers

The acting troupe for Story Theatre, decked-out in filly white Jumpsuits and dresses, came out into the audience and assaulted us with niceness. Some blew soap bubbles, another handed out flowers, one juggled bean bags and every now and then an actor would sing a catchy, cutesy-pie nursery rhyme. For a moment I thought I had stumbled into an Up With People dress rehearsal and they would surely, by the end of the evening, try to convunce me to shed all of my earthly possessions and join their cult. I hunkered down in my seat, sharpened my pen and cynicism, and mentally prepared myself to sit through two hours of saccharine sweet children's theatre.

Well, I was wrong

I was treated to two hilarous hours of ten well-known fables which were presented the way Aesop and the Brothers Grumm originally intended—witty, saturcal and tongue planted firmly in cheek. Through the tales of common farm animals, simple fishermen and dimwitted woodschoppers the sacred cows of society such as the clergy, the pope, bourgeoss ideals, the landed gentry and the institution of marriage, were thoroughly lampooned. These ancient fables are full of the stuff modern theatre goers love—adulterous preachers, villatious robbers, greedy politicians, tyrant mothers and horny husbands. I had forgotten just how "adult" these "children's stories" were.

The three woman five man cast (many of them familiar faces from previous Studio productions) assumed a playful attitude with their material, and on occasion lapsed into improvisations which came close to being street theatre.

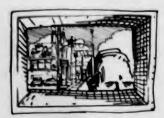

Adrianne Cury, while in the role of an inkeeper's greedy, idioi daughter, brought the house down in laughter with her spastic shirt-twiting antics (she also cracked up fellow actress Rosanne Fay who was onstage at the time). Robb Pruitt, as the dimwitted woodchopper, and Ben Gunter, as a forest troll, delved into an impromptu Goon Show-like dialogue at one point when the troll was attempting to define "yonder" to the lackwit woodchopper. This, too, brought cackles.

However, this is not to say that the production ran helter skelter. Director Jane L. Roth did a marvelous job holding the reins on her high spirited and talented cast through such easily exploitable material.

True, there was a lean towards hamming it up (which did happen at times) but it was forgivable. The romping moved and tone of the play was dictated from the start by large marquee cards for the audience. The cards introduced skits, signaled for applause, delivered painful puns, signaled for boos or hisses and made inside jokes about the play's background musicians.

Through it all, I can't remember when I've had so much fun at a play. It's hammy, loose, giddy and the best damn play in town this weekend.

Story Theatre plays at FSU Studio Theatre tonight throgh Saturday at 8:15. Tickets are $1.50 for the general public and free with student LD. Call 6:44-6500 for more information.

Coming of age in a hard light

BY STEVE DOLLAR

NEW YORK—What is this European knack for rendering unsentimentalized adolescence on film? Ever since The 400 Blows, with its heartwrenching freeze-frame that refused to punctuate Antoine Doinel's runaway saga with a happily closed ending, the pubescent have proven among the most evocative, resonant, truthful subjects in non-American movies.

The American urge—in everything from American Graffiti to Valley Girl, Fame to Footloose, The Outsiders to Rocing With the Moon—tends either to cast the characters in the twinkling nostalgia of the fillminaker's memory, making the bittersweet taste like saccharin, or to graft on a big-beat soundtrack to bridge the gaps in plot plausibility and heighten appeal to lessure-rich teens in need of a new trend to consume.

There are exceptions that subvert this rule either through art (Rumble/ish), socio-cultural acumen (Fast Times at Ridgemont High) or sheer exploitative fervor (Rock and Roll High School), or a nifty mix of all three (Risky Business). But stack even these up against their European counterparts and you'll find something crucial lacking in comparison.

Inadvertently sharing themes of teen coming-of-age and family relationships, the best entries in this year's New Directors/New Films program—a spring event sponsored by the Film Society of Lincoln Center and MOMA's Department of Film—are light years ahead of Hollywood howlers like Porky's; they approach their youthful subjects with an unflinching honesty and an off-handed, natural humor that's utterly refreshing—even if it is sometimes painfully real.

The New Directors' festival has in previous years introduced such talents as Steven Spielberg, George (Road Warrior) Miller, John Sayles, Peter (Draughtsman's Contract) Greenaway and Hector (Pixote) Babenco. Two new names to add to that list are Denmark's Bille August and Hungary's Pal Erdoss.

August's Zappu, which takes its name not from the father of the Mothers of Invention, but from a predatory pet fish that serves as the film's thematic metaphor, has the easy flow and clear-eyed frankness of the best of Truffaut but lacks the French director's often wisful tone.

Both a study of growing up in the permissive, affluent Denmark of the early '60s and a moral tale about peer pressure, casual definquency and turbulent passage to maturity. Zappa sports a summary sheen from which adolescent traumas smoulder and explode, showering the viewer with debris that is tragic and funny all at once.

August identifies well with his trio of young protagonists. Sten, the spoiled, pretty rich kid whose cruelty is born of parental neglect, Mulle, the blubberty prankster son of a Marxist steel worker, and Bjorn, the sensitive, boyishly-adult hero whose conflict of conscience is the film's center. He lets the story unravel from their point-of-view, and this gives the film's toughest scenes—a theft victim's bashing, an awkwardly sweet first sexual encounter—a potent impact.

The evaporation of optimism and innocence

But August also has a wicked sense of humor: there's a sex education scene that's as hilarious as anything in Monty Python. and an indifferent mother's sunlamp proves her disturbed child's evilest tool of revenge

The Princess, the feature film debut by Hungarian Pal Erdoss, betrays its director's background in TV documentaries. Shot in super-grains black and white by a trio of cinematographers that includes the brilliant Lajos Koltai (Mephisto), The Princess looks like the rawest End of cinema verite. Glossed up, this up-and-mostly-down story of a country girl's voyage to the Big City

Beware the Pigs of Trend

BY STEVE DOLLAR

NEW YORK — Avenue A — the Champs Elysee of Alphabet City — is the center of an amazingly fecund spawning ground, a Last Exit to Brooklyn or a community of artists, performers, dilletantes and scene haunters who find the rent cheap and the ambience funky, at least until the growing cancer of gentrification drives everybody over the Bridge to Park Slope.

The Village Vone touts the profusion of new art galleries, economy sized niches with names like Civilian Warfare, I'un Gallery and Gracie Mansion, that are at once building a sense of boheme solidarity and proving the hot ticket for moneyed Upper West Siders who find they can buy into the latest trends — the streetwise work of artists like David Wojnarowsky, Kenny Scharf and (FILL IN BLANK) the grafitti hero of the month — for a heckuva lot cheaper than the megabucks that the Mary Boone superstans (David Salle, et al) command. Course, while this is great for the image of the neighborhousd, which until a recent crackdown was a junkle's drug mart, it also, mexitably, it driving property values up and we all know what that means.

But the inevitable hasn't happened yet, which means you can full get cheap drinks and watch the boys—gowned in exquisitely cheap chic—sway in heel on the bar top at the Pyramid Club.—listen to regulars grumble about the influx of the "bridge and tunnel crowd" drawn by recent uptown publicity, and eatch the kind of performance art that, for the moment at least, remains happily underground, truffles as yet barely sniffed by the Piss of Trends.

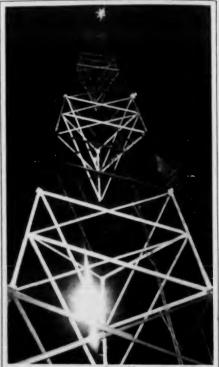

The Pyramid's hottest ticket, nearing I-pisode 40 of its continuing saga, is John Jesurun's dizzily surreal Chang in a Void Moon. Staged in the snugly claustrophobic back room — where on any night but Monday vou can find bands like Certain General or Band of Outsiders gigging loudly, or the pixilated flurry of Yoshilo Chuma's scrappy School of Hard Knocks dance performance troupe — Chang utterly defies explication. It's like a fugue from a Bunuel film, or Ernie Kovacs on acid, or, as a sage observer noted "like floating high on a feather, contemplating the nature of existence." Or counting angels dancing on the head of a pin. Jesuriun's imagination knowns no bounds and Chang is geared to its own paralogical pataphysics and I'm not sure if gathering the narrative threads of the previous installiments would make this ball of yarn any more decipherable.

Chang, which can best be described as a kind of opiated soap opera, sports a cast of 18-26 characters." past, present and future real, dead or imagined." according to lesurun, who cranks out a new script each week for the Monday night performances. In the last intallment—Episode 37 or 38, entitled. "Dean Not Dead or Seven Rooms of Gloom"—much of the cast, which includes two Changs and a character known as the Infanta who is represented by a golder chair, had died in a plane crash that had landed them atop a herd of rebra.

That didn't stop them, however, from engaging in a metaphysical tug-of-war gymnastic wordplay and a batch of dimestore Vaudeville anties that haven't been seen since television's Golden Age.

Chang is scheduled for a photo-feature in an upcoming Logue, but its run will be interrupted for a tour of several Eastern cities. Trend-shoppers will have to look elsewhere.

Impressive renderings of our Thoughts and Fears

BY CURT FIELDS FLAMBEAU ARTS EDITOR

The best work in the Florida State University Graduating Artists Show is almost an invasion of privacy

Mimi Holmes and T.D. Burton have each produced impressive renderings of the thoughts and fears found in so many of us today.

Holmes has designed a series of pieces based upon an old Mayan legend. The Mayans believed if a child had a problem, a doll should be placed beneath the child's pillow overnight. When the child awoke the next morning, the problem would be gone, absorbed by the doll

Taking that legend a little further. Holmes has created "modern dolls for modern problems." They're the recipients of hundreds of little pin pricks, bound and confined, like so many of the people whose problems they're supposed to absorb

Burton's scenes are for the "nervous ones who hide in their rooms" but stick around to see what may happen next. Burton uses blues and blacks to evoke that three in the morning, staring at the ceiling. Holmes: Fear of Disclosure Doll feeling of alienation and despair

You can almost hear Albert King in the background singing "That's What the Blues Is All About

The large oil on wood installation of Burton's that's in the show also fits right in with the long dark-night-of-the-soul mood

Alison Barrows' brightly colored wood and mixed media pieces continue this theme, though less obviously so. They seem brimming with potential energy and movement. You want to tap this or pull that and see what sort of chain reaction you might start. But with pieces like "Victim" and 'Sheltered Insecurities' the imagined results are anything but pretty, though the pieces themselves are fascinating. It is as difficult to turn from Barrows' work as it is to look away from an impending accident. You don't want to miss anything.

Less ominous but just as intriguing are the sculptures and pastels of Michelle Charles. Charles has a passion for birds, fish and various permutations of the two in her work "The Birds on the Mountain" lures you in with its simple attractiveness while "The Roosters" is as bold and sure as a cock's crow at sunrise. Her "Still Life" is anything but still. It is one of the most aggressive still lifes you are likely to see for a while

Jim Cannata's color photography deserves, and claims, much attention too, especially his military death series. It conjures up evening news scenes of Vietnam, El Salvador, Afghanistan and other military quagmires

Artists like these make this a show not to be missed. Make time to go see this show, it is worth it

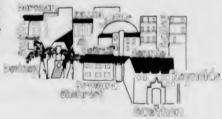

The Graduating Artists Show opens tonight from 7-9 in the FSU Fine Arts Gallery. The show runs through April 27. Gallery hours 10-4 weekdays, 1-4 weekends.

It's Old Home Week for the Beats for a while Besides Ginsberg, there's a disheveled no longer pretty Lucien Carr, a drunken Terry Southern, a trim John Giorno and even Burroughs' younger brother Mortimer, who tells us that "Naked Lunch disgusted me I didn't see any use for such language," while Bill gazes skyward in the family's St. Louis garden.

But Brookner digs deeper than this, letting Burroughs explicate himself as a self-invented creature of delightful contradictions. On his wife Joan. "She said to me, 'you're supposed to be a fag, but you're as good as a pimp in bed." "After a learned display of a closet of lethal weaponry in Burroughs' Bowery Bunker and a visit to target practice." I detest violence."

Burroughs even hams it up as Doctor Benway in a splatter-flick takeoff from Lunch, swishing a plunger in a rusty commode, "sterilizing" it to massage a patient's heart while hapless attendants look on.

Brookner's smartest move is letting Burroughs act as his own biographer, capturing his cackling, avuncular wit in alit W.C. Fields' glory. "It's not every corpse," the author reminds us, "That can walk."

Another Old Master, still at the peak of his astringent powers at 80, is French "transcendentalist" filmmaker Robert Bresson, whose latest work L'Argent is the product of a sensibility as tersely ascetic as an hermetic monk's Translated to Money, this twilight masterpiece contemplates unspeakable corruption inexplicable violence and an innocent's descent into the Maelstrom of Late Capitalism in the calmest possible terms.

Blunt to a painful point, L'Argent drives its bleakly moral lesson home with a fiercely effective economy a minimum of dialogue, a minimum of "acting", and a minimum of camera movement. A mid this Spartan stillness Bresson achieves the beatific. By rejecting expectations of florid narrative and naturalistic performances, he forces the viewer to see only the pure hard kernel of a truth money corrupts, and woe be the man who is not a co-conspirator in its corruption.

Bresson uses the plight of a hardworking prole (Chrisian Pates) to illustrate his theme, setting him us as the patsy for a daisy chain of counterfeit cash-passing that lands this naive hero in jail, costs him his family and job and leads mevitably, irrevocably to gruesome slaughter L'Argent is about as far from a good Saturday night movie like, say, Romancing the Stone, as you can get lt's not "entertaining", but neither is it facile It's more like a Testament from the Mount. rigorous, didactic and unbending But its also the rarest possible sort of filmmaking, the kind of movie no one else could ever make, so singular in aesthetic that, as someone like Andrew Sarris must've said, watching it is the closest thing a moviegoer can come to climbing Mount Everest. Thank God Bresson still feels its worth the effort.

Mounting his own singular Everest is Soviet director Andrei Tarkovsky, whose Nostalghia is as langorous and vague as L'Argent is single-mindedly severe. And damned if anybody buy Tarkovsky knows what this movie is about. Babbling, line wolf mystics, an acking melancholy for a faraway homeland, the soft, reassuring gurgle of dripping water, the inevitable futility of translating language and spirit—they all present themselves as significant to Nostalghia's fuzzily poetic structure, but they never cohere into a palpable center; Tarkovsky won't give you anything to sink your teeth into

Instead, he creates a feast for the eyes.

Marilyn Monroe: Steamy Letters

L NITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

NEW YORK—A love letter Marilyn Monroe wrote in bed describing herself as a "predatory animal" has attracted record bids from around the world, auctioneer Charles Hamilton said Thursday.

"Wow, what a letter," Hamilton said "Is there any man living who wouldn't be excited to get a letter like that from Marilyn Monroe?"

The letter, a self-portrait of Monroe exercising and three photographs of her seated on a stone with her legs exposed to the thigh were expected to be the highlight of the Thursday sale of 153 signatures and memorabilia of the famous and infamous.

Also up for sale were four handwritten letters of Natalie Wood—"She didn't write many letters." Hamilton said—32 letters of George Bernard Shaw, as well as letters of Shostakovich, Will Rogers, Fzra Pound and E.F. Cummings.

There is also a copy of Mein Kampf signed by Adolf Hitler, a letter of Theodore Herzl, the father of Zionism, a pass John Hancock signed for a soldier of the Continental Congress, and a self-caricature of W C Fields "with a great, bright shiny nose like a Christmas tree ornament."

The Monroe memorabilia was part of the estate of playwright Sir Terence Raitigan, who died in 1977 and wrote the 1957 movie "The Prince and the Showgirl," in which Monroe starred

In the March 29, 1960, typewritten letter to Lester Markel, then a New York Times editor, Monroe wrote, "Here I am still in bed.

"I've been lying here thinking, even of you. I'll bet you don't know how fond I am of you—you're one of those that one could say anything one meant or wanted to.

"I didn't want you to get a glimpse of me, though, until I was wearing my Somali leopard (coat)." She was referring to her trips to see her doctor, who practiced in the same building where Markel lived.

The letter ended with the words, "I want you to think of me as a predatory animal"

Hamilton said sealed bids were received from collectors in England and Germany in advance of the sale and that along exceed the estimate prices of $5,500 for the self-portrait, done in yellow watercolor for a charity sale in London in 1956, and $1,500 for the love letter.

The record for an item of Monroe memorabilia was $3.500 in December for a letter she wrote April 13, 1944, to her friend Janiece Wright in Sandy. Utah, that describes her loneliness following marriage to James Dougherts and her first break in Hollywood as an actress for a commercial

A letter Monroe wrote to a friend seeking help from her confinement in the psychiatric ward at a Manhatlan hospital was valued at $18,000 but was pulled from a sale in January because of a dispute over ownership.

"The two most famous people who ever fived, whose names are recognized from the depths of the Congo to the mountains of the Himalayas are Babe Ruth and Jesse James," Hamilton claimed. "Marilyn, certainly, is right behind them."

"In the pictures of her when she looks most sexy, she seems totally oblivious to it," Hamilton said

Libya's Col. Moam-mar Khadafy was exposed to a slice of American life Thursday via satellite on NBC's "Today" show. While waiting in Tripoli to be interviewed about the standoff at the Libyan Embassy in London. Khadafy, was allowed to monitor the show and saw Bryant Gumbel interview Joan Collins of "Dynasty" and also caught the show's weather director, Willard Scott, doing the report from New York's Herald Square while dressed in a bunny suit. A man with long hair and heavy makeup had quite a time in San Juan, Puerto Rico, by telling everyone he was singer Boy George. He spent two nights at a plush beachfront hotel, had his picture on the front page of two San Juan dailies and was interviewed on a television program.

But fans of Boy George's band, Culture Club, called the newspapers to say the man wasn't Boy. The real George played a concert in Atlanta Wednesday and had another Thursday night in Charlotte, N.C.

Whatever else it may be about, Nostalghia is an intoxicating, hallucinatory visual experience (unfortunaties, the nonnarrative's barely perceptible evolution moving at the pace of a lazy inch-worm lulled me into a sweet, peaceful nap.) The camera is like a magician's wand, conjuring misty, faded earth tones out of the verdant splendor of the Italian countryside, rendering the trevento and quattracento architecture of its cathedrals and shrines as haunted ruins ready to crumble in the heavy, sepia-tinted air, the camera holds so still, barely moving forward, you can watch cracking frescoes perspire. And there's Mother Russia, seen in the somnambulent reveries of the film's Soviet hero drizzly. grey, ethereal, drained of color yet more beautiful than anything on God's green earth.

fark Asky's as adopt at obliterating boundaries between dream and reality as the Bergman of Wild Strawberries and Presona, as fantass intrudes into the Russian's mind - he's a translator sent to Italy to research the life of an obscure Soviety composer, but spends most of his time in a search of some unknowable Truth so do they wander onto the screen. His dog appears in a hotel room to curl up near his bedside, an Italian assistant (Domiziana Gordano, whose flowing golder locks the camera caresses with a lover's touch) looks on, softly embraced by the Russian's wife, and the screen inches slowly toward his sleeping form Cut The dreamer awakes, the room is empty

I awoke from my own dreams, a brief sleep adding an unintended ellipsis that didn't seem out of place with Nostalghia's narrative growth, in time to watch an Italian madman (Erland Josephson) immolate himself atop the statue of Marcus Aurelius and - crosscut - Tarkovsky's hero attempt to place a burning candle at the base of watery shrine wall. He walks tenderly, cautiously through a rocks pool, but the darn candle keeps blowing out. He makes it on the third try and dies. And then Mother Russia fills the screen. Home at last, the hero stares into a pool of water, dog by his side

Lither Tarkovsky owns some hefts poetic heense or something's been lost in translation. Whichever, it's fine by me as long as he makes movies this gorgeous

Musicology even a Nielsen family could love

We students of history owe a great debt to eccentrics. Without them, our study of the past would be dry, analytical and boring Luckily, our civilization surprises us every few years with a person who is different.

These people mark their ages with distinctive imprints. Some call them leaders, others call them strangers

A great American devoted his life to finding such people and describing their achievements to the public. His name was Robert Ripley. Ripley's rallying cry "Believe it or Not!" created a thirst for historical knowledge in the minds of an entire generation of our nation's young and young at-heart. His books are still consulted today by those who search - by those who ache to Without such distinguished guides as Ripley (and others, like the Wallaces of Book of Lists fame), we would confront a dire lack of interest in the past. The reputations of our once cherished intellectuals would atrophy and die from neglect. Let historians talk all they want about practicing pure history, but deep down they want to be loved just like anybody else. They want popular acceptance, and they get it because the evangelical scholars like Riples lead the flocks to the altar of the past. The greatest historians not your stuffed shirts, mind you - know what the people want, what makes people desire to know more.

The preface to the Book of Lists contains the words that may serve as a credo for this pathfinding stream in historical writing

"We felt that our findings and creations could be as exciting to other people as they were to us ourselves. We felt confident about that because we had already tried it out. Actually, that's how we got the idea for this book "

How many historians truly believe that their work will be even the least bit interesting to other people? Not just their students, colleagues, family or friends, but other people? many historians share what they know so freely? Not many. And, most important of all, how many historians write with such an altruistic motive? Not many

Most want to please their superiors

But Robert Ripley was not fettered by tenute, there is no Dean of Faculties at the

Wallace dinnertable. Hence their writing is free, from the heart. They write for a public that accepts prose with gratitude, not with one eye on the till and the other on the GPA's of athletes

I, too, am unkept by a university Therefore, I humbly offer my services in the great tradition of Ripley and Wallace But I field, the immortal art of music, which so desperately needs great historians. What I propose, then, is a new improved mode of musicology based on random but interesting facts, tenuous connections and learned improvisation

To demonstrate my new method I have assembled the following article, which I am to present at the upconing colloquium of the Society for Obscure Disciplines As my subject I have chosen one of music history's most oft maligned figures

Significant Digits

Perhaps no figure in music history has sustained as many attempts at humor as Guido d'Arezzo Guido (c. 991 1011) was a humble Italian priest and musician who nevertheless made great contributions to music education and notation.

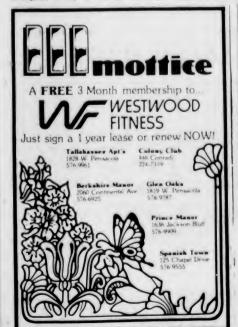

Scholars do not know a great deal about his life, and there are but few pictures of him extant. One of these (see illus.) reminds us of the widely circulated rumor that Caudo, like the bishop Theodaldus, was either very tall or two people under a sheet

In addition to the fulfillment of the duties of his order. Cando was a pioneer in new methods of teaching chants to choirs. As a mnemonic device he derived for specific pitches the syllables, "ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la" from the text to an old hymn, "Ut queant laxis " (As music became big business, "int" was replaced by "do ")

This was a giant step forward for music, but today Guido rarely gets the credit he so richly deserves. Without Guido d'Arezzo, Rodgers and Hammerstein would have a great gaping hole in The Sound of Music where "Do Re Mi" should be

The alternative is frightening indef'nite article, B, a noisy little bug, C, a lot of wa ha ter, D, with 1 S it's a drug, T, a cockney word for him; I, a grade to throw away, G, ain't Julie Andrews dim? And that brings us back to A

Guido explained hissyllabars thus. "If you wish to learn some note or phrase—you must observe the same note or phrase at the head of some very well-known melody, and for every note you wish to learn have at hand such a melody does that I use in teaching boxs."

The crucial words in the preceding quotation are "have at hand," even though Guido himself was not then aware of their importance and therefore did not have the foresight to italicize them. I did, because the indication to "have" certain pitches "at hand" is, as far as I can tell, Cuido's only personal record of the educational method that was to make him famous and the target of poor humor

The symbol of modern music education in the Middle Ages was the so-called Guidonian Hand. Choirboys all over Europe were trained to produce specific pitches when an instructor pointed to different spots on his own hand. Hence Guido's favorite tune, "Ut queant laxis," would be learned by trebles as "Knuckle, knuckle, thumb, palm" and so on.

The technique was phenomenally effective. The Bishop of Arezzo was quite impressed, and the musically curious Pope John XIX indulged himself by granting Guido an audience

Guido felt that his method of music education would most assuredly hold sway over Europe, but there was one problem Musicians then — like musicians now — were passionately averse to manual labor. Getting such persons to use their hands for anything other than lifting mugs or holding other hands was a fairly difficult task.

Many teachers claimed that the new system caused chapped, reddened hands. Others maintained that years later their knuckles would be grossly enlarged. A few of the more wisome abbots complained about broken fingernails.

Despite fervent debate, which often came to fisticuffs, Guido's work took hold. Musicians everywhere began to talk about the Guidonian Hand, its application at the right stage in the development of choirboys brought new artistic standards to the great cathedrals of Europe.

Today, however, Guido's method has been supplanted by computers and trained music educators. The Hand is generally brushed aside despite the recent boom in digital watching. Musicians now joke at the expense of the humble priest, rarely is a music history class spared the professor's insipid comments about Guido "giving music education a hand."

Even the so-called scholarly societies of our major universities perpetrale such abuse. At a revent meeting of the ESU Muse Theory Society, several titles for a new journal were proposed. These included Theoretically Speaking. Some Thoughts About Muse Theory, and Guido's Goluxy Guido was spared, the last of these was not chosen. (My suggestion, Theoreuith Thiuff, was ignored.) But the fact remains that some somewhat educated person would willingly take Guido's name in vain. That one is much too many.

You can't help but wonder how Guido would come to grips with today's world. I think he would be a star. The end of his right arm would sport popular culture's most famous body part since Jimmy Durante's nose. His hand would be on the cover of magazines everywhere. His pastoral duties would not be affected.— not in a church where the priests write potboilers and the Pope can make records. Guido would sing "Ut queant laxis" all the way to the bank.

Yes, Guido would be a star, believe it or not. If you don't, you should, because the truth is in your hands.

BONN, West Germany-A U.S. Air Force computer specialist has been charged with giving secret defense information to a foreign country, an air force spokesman said today.

Capt. Ralph McNally, spokesman for the U.S. Air Force's 601st Tactical Control Wing at Sembach Air Base, said Sgt. Francisco de Asis Mira, 24, will face a general court martial June 18 on the charges.

A West German prosecutor said Thursday that Mira, a naturalized American born in Spain, and two West German accomplices sold information on American codes and radar to the East German State Security Service.

VIENNA, Austria-NATO unveiled Thursday what it called a major new proposal aimed at breaking the deadlock in East West troop reduction talks but communist nations were cool to the initiative.

It was the second major Western arms reduction proposal in two days, coming a day after Vice President George Bush presented a draft treaty in Geneva, Switzerland to ban chemical weapons

The new proposal at the Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction (MBFR) talks provides for greater Western flexibility in counting current levels of Warsaw Pact forces. coupled with a demand for tighter on-site verification of eventual troop or arms reductions

BEIRUT, Lebanon -- President Amin Gemayel met Syrian leader Hafez Assad Thursday in a "last-chance" quest for peace in Lebanon. Bursts of gunfire jolted Beirut on the eve of a deployment of cease-fire observers in the city

Lebanese newspapers said the summit talks would center on arranging a firm cease-fire, forming a new Cabinet, granting more political power to the Moslem majority and regaining control of Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon.

PARIS-The Communist Party grudgingly decided to remain in the French government Thursday by joining the Socialists in a vote of confidence in support of the controversial economic austerity programs of Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy.

The Socialists hold an absolute majority in the National Assembly and were in no danger of losing the vote, but President François Mitterand has indicated he would prefer to rule with the Communists rather than without them

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras - Salvadoran guerrillas went on alert Thursday to guard against retaliation for rebel strafing of a helicopter carrying two American senators to eastern Honduras, rebel radio said

The rebels' Radio Venceremos said anti-aircraft batteries fired on two U.S. helicopters Wednesday when they passed over five rebel controlled towns in northeastern FI

Three 50-caliber machine gun bullets slammed into the helicopter carrying Sens. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., and J. Bennett Johnston, D. la , but no one was hurt, said U.S. Embassy officials in Tegucigalpa.

TACOMA, Wash.-President Reagan gave dock workers loading goods for China an economic pep talk Thursday and said he is pacing himself on his 11,000 mile trip to Peking -his first foray to a communist nation

Questioned about his China visit, Reagan said he is pacing himself in order to overcome jet lag. The 73-year old president said he has been thinking about the 13-hour time difference and expressed the hope that "when I get there, I'm not going to find my eyes closed "

During his visit to the Vatican in 1982, the president fell asleep during a televised address by Pope John Paul II, an embarrassment aides blamed on jet lag. At the end of the China trip, Reagan is to meet the pope again in Alaska

LOS ANGELES-John De Lorean, desperate to regain control of De Lorean Motor Co. and its exotic gull winged sports car, gladly made a pact with undercover federal agents to pump narcotics money into the ailing firm, witnesses testified Thursday.

FBI agent Benedict Tisa, who posed as a corrupt banker willing to handle money generated by multimillion dollar drug transactions, testified that during his investigation of De Lorean, the auto maker agreed to accept $50 million from a major drug trafficker and launder it through his auto company

With that done, Tisa testified, De Lorean planned to go into the drug business himself in partnership with yet another underworld figure. James Hoffman, who-unknown to De Lorean-had become an FBI informant

"The House goes four years quicker than we do" in selecting future leadership, she said. "In politica, it's certainly healthy to get goals and work toward them."

The race is not expected to heat up until after the November elections

Both senaturs think withen are finally arriving in Florida politics, noting the 1980 election of U.S. Sen. Paula Hawkins as a prime example.

"Women have come so far in the state of Florida and they are rapidly approaching political equality," said Castor. "We have been successful at swelling the tanks at the local level. And now, that pool is moving up.

"We have not done a good job in congressional ranks,"

"No woman has ever been elected to the Florida Cabinet. It gets harder as you climb up the ladder."

"I think Florida is extremely progressive," said Margolis "We have nine women in the Florida Senate and a woman U.S. senator. A woman can run for statewide office or national office and feel comfortable."

Both agree the Democrats would be well adissed to nominate a woman for vice president at the San Francisco convention this summer

"I certainly would like to see a qualified female as a vice presidential condidate," said Margolis. "Understanding the realities of having to balance the ticket, I think it would be helpful."

Castor even has a particular candidate in mind—Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, D. N. Y.

"I think (a woman candidate) would add a tremendous amount of excitement to the campaign," she said

Castor had a taste of statewide politics in her unsuccessful bid for lieutenant governor in 1978 on the tacket with then-Lt Gos, Jim Williams. "I learned a lot," she said, adding she holds "no regrets or remorse."

She is already in line to serve as president pro tempore under Johnston in 1985-86 and will be the first woman in that post. However, the job is mainly ceremonial.

And, Margolis hints a race for a higher office might be among her future goals beyond a term as Senate president, of course

"I certainly would be looking to the next step," she said coyly, "I can't tell you what it is. The opportunities seem to present themselves."

AT The Age of 50. Edna finally took that Guilt Trip she had always dreamed about.

the war-fighting camp has an entirely different aim-deterring a Soviet attack of any kind on our allies or in areas of ELS interest

In short, they want to spread our nuclear umbrella over the globe as we did in the 1950s and early 1960s.

These two worlds of deterrence are radically at odds. Eugene Rostow, Reagan's first arms control director, criticized arms limitation talks directed at an agreement that would reduce or bar the possibility of a Soviet nuclear attack on the United States as a "totally inadequate standard" Such a policy, he said "would leave in Such a policy, he said, "would leave us important prisoners in our own country, unable to defend our interests in Europe, the Middle East or elsewhere

Such thinkers are not worried about the "window of vulnerability " Rather, their concern, as defined by Navy Secretary John Lehman, is that "much of the world, wherein lies the vital interests of the United States and its allies, is now for the first time outside of the nuclear umbrella "

This framework shifts the debate from questions of nuclear engineering to fundamentals of foreign policy. For the war fighters, nuclear deterrence isn't a matter of national survival, but of advancing our national interests Nuclear war is merely the extension of politics by other

As Rostow noted, deterring a Soviet attack in distant regions requires vastly more potent forces than simply deterring a bolt out of the blue. It demands nothing less than the ability to disarm the Soviet missile force, "dominate" every rung of the "ladder of escalation" and limit "damage" to our own homeland

These dictates drive the administration's program of nuclear "modernization" - a euphemism for acquiring first strike (or "counterforce") capabilities. The highly accurate MX and Trident II missiles and improvements to command and control systems will give us a more 'credible" threat against Soviet forces. Thus Secretary of State George Shultz has defended the "Peacekeeper," as he calls the MX, not for its value in defending the United States, but for its "important effect on the Soviet's willingness to run risks in a regional conflict or crisis."

The logic of nuclear war fighting necessarily turns arms control into a cosmetic, obscuring weapons modernization Thus the current director of arms control agency, Kenneth Adelman, supports a crash buildup of counterforce and anti-ballistic weapons to convince the Soviets that "the United States would indeed risk nuclear escalation on behalf of foreign commitments" and in "limited crises."

None of these notions was born with this administration, of course. All presidents since World War II have embraced "extended deterrence". But few have faced as squarely just what it requires

Is extended deterrence—wherever it applies—really wise or achievable? Surely the costs are staggering. And these costs aren't the inescapable price of security, they are, instead, the cost of a calculated policy

But the price to our security may be much greater war-fighting posture invites the Soviets to launch on warning of attack, risking a catastrophic accident. Worse, a foreign policy based on the threat of nuclear escalation plays chicken with the lives of millions.

Extended deterrence links homeland security to foreign crises over which we have only limited influence. It sets tripwires where potential foes could stumble and test our will-in the logic of current policy, Americans might perish because the Saudi monarchy collapsed

It is cruelly ironic that President Reagan, who preaches the value of individual freedom against encroachments of the state, pursues a strategic policy that turns ordinary citizens into insignificant pawns of nuclear gamesmanship

But his liberal critics will be no freer of responsibility, and more guilty of contradiction, until they face the implications of their own position and explicitly renounce the policy of extended deterrence, even as it applies to Europe. National survival may require no less.

South Alabama does FSU wrong

BY JOHN HOLECEK

The only thing good about Thursday night's game against South Alahama. according to Horida State assistant coach Randy Carley, was that it finally got over

Other than that, things vertainly didn' go in Florida State's favor

The Jaguary pounded the Seminoles 12-4 before a crowd of 969 at Seminole Stadium.

"I know how the other half feels and it am't fun," Cailey said, referring to the fact that Horida State has usually been on the winning end of the blowouts

On the night, the Jaguary collected 19 hits off five pitchers. Despite the amount of hits the Jaguars leadoff hiller, Lance Johnson, was the star of the night Johnson, a junior from Cincinnati who went into the game with a 314 average and $2 stolen bases, went 5 for 6 on the night, including two stolen bases.

Tirst of all, South Alabama played extremely well. They didn't make any mistakes," Gailey said. "On the other sand, every mistake we made cost us some

Despite the some, the game was actually quite close for the first tix innings

Going into the top of the seventh, ISU trailed South Alabama by just one run, 5-4

But the Jaguary added a single run in their half of the seventh, while the Seminoles went down in order Neither team scored another run until the ninth, when the Jaguars sent 11 hitters to the plate, collecting six runs on five hits

Doug Treadway, who pitched 4.2 innings and allowed four runs on ten hits, was tagged with the loss. His record is now 3.1. For South Alahama, Joe Alter (4-0) picked up the win

Despite the amount of hits and runs scored in the game, not a single home run was hit

The Jaguary, who are currently ranked 29th in the Collegiate Baseball poll, are now 12.11. ISU's, who for the first time in recent memory aren't ranked record falls to 38-22

The two teams will meet again tonight at

Rattlers work toward fall

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS PLANING AL STAPP WHITTH

When your football team goes 7-4 last year and most of your starters return, you should improve, right? Well, Florida A&M head coach Rudy Hubbard hopes so.

After going through a disappointing season that saw a team mixed with all stars and newcomers, Hubbard hopes his team will be able to settle down in 1984 and play some sound, successful football

This year he'll miss several of those allstars, but he has the personnel (along with an easier schedule) to improve upon last year, if spring practice is any sign-

The Rattlers' spring practice (like so many others) was rather uneventful, as Hubbard and the rest of the coaching staff had the squad working on fundamentals.

Mostly, Hubbard wanted to take this spring to accomplish a few basic goals. One was to find someone to replace departed All-American nose guard R.C. Eason, a player who constantly drew double and triple coverage because of his awesome ability. So far, no one has stepped out to assume that role, and hence the line is a major concern for Hubbard. Perhaps the biggest.

Outside of that. Hubbard wanted to fill a few other holes created by the graduation of three key players. For the most part, he has been successful

Can the team improve on 7-4, though? "I don't like to think in terms of numbers (of victories)," Hubbard said. "What I hate to do is call out numbers, and then people tend to remember them. What I like to do is think in terms of winning the first ball game, and then take it from there "

But the team will probably be better. "We're never satisfied with that kind of year (last year)," Hubbard said. "We start out every year expecting to do better We're planning to improve on that."

Basically, the Rattlers won't be much different in style from last year's team. though the offense may not pass as much Though the defense remains mostly intact, some spots need to be filled in order for the unit to improve over last year Here is a quick glimpse of the Rattlers' offense, defense and special teams

OFFENSE Probably the only major loss the Rattlers suffered was the loss of All American and All MEAC wide receiver Ray Alexander Better known as "Alexander the Great," the lanky Miami native finished his career at FAMU owning every receiving record in the book. In a way, though, his loss may help the Rattlers even out its defense, according to Hubbard.

"We'll be able to throw the ball all over the field this year," Hubbard said. "It can get predictable. When you know you have a eux like Ray Alexander, vou convince yourself you can't throw it to anyone else."

Once again, the Rattlers will be an option-oriented offense, having its whole backfield return intact. With an improved line, the offense should be much more consistent this year

Quarterback. The Rattlers are rich in talent here, especially with the return of starter Mike Kelly (6-1, 185). Kelly started the first part of the season last year before going down with an ankle injury. Anthony did an exceptional job relieving Kelly, but Kelly was eventually able to come back and win his job back. Thornton will not be with the team this year, not being able to keep his grades up Backing up Kelly will probably be sophomore Calvin Giles (5-11, 170), who earned the number two rights at the end of spring drills. Behind him is sophomore Harold Vinson (6-11/2, 180) and then sophomore Anderson Fluellen, who was excused from drills for baseball.

Running backs: Freshman sensation Tony Barber (5-8, 170) returns to give the

Rattlers that needed dangerous tailback in the backfield on the option. Tremendously quick, Barber can also find holes easily and turn the corner as well as anyone. Junior Carl Williams (6-1, 185) returns from a try at quarterback to battle Dale Robertson for playing time behind Barber.

At fullback, the Rattlers will once again enjoy the talents of senior Charles Bevel (5-10, 200), who took a quick shot at tailback but returned to his familiar position. Not only is he an excellent blocker, Bevel can be a dangerous runner at times. Behind him are Curtis Burns (6-0, 220), Reginald Jones (6-2, 210) and then Lester Axson (6-1, 220). The depth at these two positions means the Rattlers' option attack willl possibly be stronger than ever.

Offensive line: This is what will make or break the option. It was this area where the Rattlers had the most troubles last year. Line coach Alan Bogan, who returned last year after working with the defense, has put together a line that could potentially be awesome. But the unit is untested, and therefore could be considered a question mark. Big Stan Knighton (6-2, 330) will have to trim some weight to be the effective left guard Hubbard wants him to be. Lining up next to him at left tackle will probably be Vian Wilson (6-3, 250), followed by Percy Griffin (6-2, 245), and Randall Godwin (6-3, 265). Herman Hargrett (6-3, 230) is the veteran at center, while Vernice Smith (6-3, 240) has nailed down the job at right guard. Andrew Chavers (6-1, 260) will start at right tackle, followed by last year's starter Kelton Swanigan (6-2, 250). Todd Williams returns at tight end

Receivers: Last year, it was Alexander and not much else. Sure his stats were astronomical, but he was considered the only reliable target. After waiting in the wings, Billy Wilson (6-0, 180) and Lewis Bennett (6-0, 175) should get their share of passes at split end and flanker, respectively. Look for sophomore Robert Centile, who was on the verge of beating out Wilson in spring practice, to see plenty of time. He could be a game-breaker

DEFENSE: Outside of the line, the defense appears

Hubbard hops to point the Rattlers toward the Division IAA playoffs again.

sound. Look for the linebackets and secondary to more or less carry the unit while the line jells. Last year, it was the secondary that gave Hubbard the most headaches, but now he points to the line as his main concern, and rightfully so

Defense line: At the risk of sounding redundant, this area simply must improve for the defense to excel. Nobody appears ready to take over as a dominator in the form of Eason, but that's an awful lot to ask of anyone. Since Eddie McDowell will not play due to neck problems, Hubbard will probably turn to converted (ackle Kennedy Cooper (6-2, 270) to take over at nose guard. Bruce Norflee (6-23), 233) and Ira Reynolds (5-11, 230) will flank Cooper at the tackle slots. Time will probably be the key factor here.

Linebackers: Easily the team's strongest area, with All-American outside linebacker Darryl Drew (6-1, 205) leading the way. On the other side will be Merlon Jones (6-3, 225). The inside linebackers will spend a lot of time in the early going catching the line's leftovers, but they should be up to the task. Underrated Wilhe Brown (6-2, 210) and Everett Blakely (6-0, 225) give the Rattlers a tough combination.

Secondary: Once last year's problem area, this group should be in good shape, having only lost strong safety Sam Bronson. Hubbard says that converted fullback Gene Arkins (6-0, 195) could wind up being one of the Rattlers' best strong safeties ever once he gets the experience. Zach Richards will be the weak safety, while injured Duane Drisdom (6-1, 203) and experienced Don Jefferson will be the cornerback. Willie Harpe and Tony Hill should lend the needed depth in case of injury.

Special teams: Again, another area the Rattlers will only get better. Junior Lane Taylor (6-2, 175) returns, and hopes to up his average to around 40 yards a punt. Backing him up will be Rod Dawson (6-0, 200), who once started for the squad. Maurice Freeman (6-4, 205), who connected on all extra point attempts as a fieshman, will try to kick a few more field goals this year. Having only six tries last season, he made three. Having kicked a 55-yarder in high school, Freeman has the range. Team captain Mike Smith will run back kicks.

Saturday's Orange and Green game, which starts at 1/30 p.m., will only run an hour and a half, according to Hubbard. It will be run just like the previous practices this spring, and will not have any kicking.

CLAST: How big a threat to black students?

BY DEBORAH HARTLEY

What is the median of the data of the following sample?

7, 7, 4, 6, 7, 4, 7, 2

A, 5.5 B, 6.0

C. 6.5

D. 7.0

Choose one of the following topics for your essay.

What factors do you consider most important in choosing a job or career? Why?
 Discuss the influence of television on you and your family.

If you've taken the College Level Achievement Skills Test — the CLAST — you probably recognize the sample test items above. The CLAST survived a challenge from black educators and legislators in the Florida House last Tuesday, when the Higher Education Committee voted against delaying enforcement of the CLAST until 1987.

Even though the proposal to delay enforcing CLAST, sponsored by Rep. Al Lawson, D-Tallahassee, had a powerful cosponsor in House Speaker Lee Moffitt, D-Tampa, the committee still voted 10-8 to require Florida sophomores to present acceptable CLAST scores before receiving their Associate of Arts degree, or enrolling for upper division classes, starting August 1, 1984. Students who fail one part of the exam can continue taking classes for one year — but they must retake the part of the exam they failed and pass to receive credit.

Black legislators like Lawson and Sen. Carrie Meek, who sponsored a Senate version of Lawson's bill, argue that CLAST will drive minorities from Florida's community colleges and universities because they are less well-prepared in high school than their white counterparts.

They say black high school students are less likely to take college preparatory courses than are white students, and that parents,

Florida Flambeau/ Bob O'Lary

'I'm sure we'll see more minority students failing the first time out than majority students. But CLAST is attainable.' —FAMU program director guidance counselors and teachers are less likely to urge black students to sign up for tougher classes.

As a result, many black educators and legislators argue, black students enter college with academic disadvantages they may not have made up by their sophomore year. They say CLAST is "punitive" — it punishes students for receiving an inferior education and bad advising in the state's high schools.

How do blacks and Hispanics fare on the CLAST test? Whether or not the test is "punitive," there's no question black students are more likey to fail the test than are their white counterparts.

CLAST tests four areas — reading, writing, computation and essay. In the test given on March 10, 1984, two percent of white American students failed the reading section, compared with 22 percent of black American students, and nine percent of Hispanic American students.

In writing, roughly four percent of the whites failed, 12 percent of the blacks and nine percent of the Hispanics.

In computation, two percent of the whites failed, compared with 15 percent of the blacks and four percent of the Hispanics. And in the essay, five percent of the whites failed as opposed to 25 percent of the blacks and 17 percent of the Hispanics.

"I'm sure we'll see more minority students failing the first time out than majority students," said Gertrude Simmons, a Florida A&M University professor and head of FAMU's College Level Acadmeic Skills Program, CLASP. "When you look at the education of blacks in Florida, you'll find that blacks who go to college tend not to have had college preparatory classes more often than whites who go to college.

"Surely it's not their fault — you're blaming the victim," said Simmons, "but CLAST is attainable. The scores the state is using now are reasonable. I have great faith in black students at FAMU."

Simmons said she thought one group of students likely to have trouble with the test were being ignored by media and educators alike — poor whites, particularly from rural counties in Florida.

"The least-considered group are the whites who fail CLAST," Simmons said. "They don't make the statistics, and they don't make the newspapers and there are no special programs for them."

Simmons said FAMU has developed three study modules — in math, writing and the essay — to help students who fail part of the CLAST test, and that she was applying to the vice-president for academic affairs for the funds to start a four-week summer remedial course geared at preparing students for the exam.

"But the CLAST skills are definitely taught in the classroom," Simmons said. "We cater to a different clientele at FAMU, and we're aware we'll have some students who will have difficulty passing the first time. Remedial courses as such don't really have a place in the university — ideally, since the student has to pay for the course, it ought to count for their degree, or further their career."

Simmons said she hoped students who failed a part or parts of the CLAST would get help in the areas he or she was weakest in, rather than consider leaving the university.

"The student who gets admitted to the university, and has done a year or a year and a half of college work shouldn't let a test stop him," Simmons said. "I don't think you have to be intimidated in the first place by CLAST — it's one of the most benign of standardized tests.

"It's no secret what CLAST tests," Simmons said. "It was developed by faculty members in Florida to test the skills you'd expect students to master in their freshman classes. And while the test is timed, there's adequate time to finish — nearly everyone who takes the test finishes.

"There's no penalty for wrong answers," Simmons said, "so it's to your advantage to guess if you think you know the answer — it can't hurt your score. And so far, the Department of Education hasn't set any limit on how many times you can take the test. You can retake a section more than once, if that's what it takes to pass."

The director of Florida State University's Learning Systems Institute, John McClanahan, is in charge of the CLASP at FSU, and he says he hopes the test will be "institutionalized."

"You have an SAT or ACT to apply for college, and you have to have a GRE to apply for graduate school — nowadays, you have to have CLAST scores to get into the upper division," McClanahan said. "We're trying to get sophomores to think about it like the SAT."

McClanahan and Simmons both said some Turn to CLAST, Page 5

Companion remembers Wilder the 'gentleman'

UNITED PRESSINTERNATIONAL

FORT LAUDERDALE—A woman who raced cars and went dancing with Christopher Wilder said the accused sex murderer was always a "classic gentleman" who gave no clue to his other, darker side.

"I don't have a single bad word to say about the Chris Wilder I knew," said Vicki Smith, a 27-year-old and Fort Lauderdale race car driver. "Unfortunately, he did have another side to him. But I never had a clue."

She and Wilder regularly danced at mightchubs, drove in the same races and swapped some spare parts for their porsches, the Fort Lauderdale News and Sun-Sentinel reported Sunday.

"He would always open your door and offer you his hand to help you out, like a classic gentleman of a hundred years ago," Smith said. "He was the kind of guy you would really want to bring home to your parents. You always had elegant times when you went out with Chris Wilder."

Wilder, a 39-year-old electrical contractor, shot himself during a struggle with troopers in Colebrook, N.H. April 13. His death ended a six-week, 8,000 mile journey authorities said was marked by the abduction or murder of at least 11 women.

But Smith said the Wilder she knew was an affectionate, funny, unselfish man who took meticulous care of his three English setters and longed for his native Australia

She never saw him with a camera, and at first did not believe the FBI's portrayal of Wilder as a sinister predator who stalked shopping center malls for eager young women he could lure with promises of modeling careers.

Smith was working with her pit crew before the start of a race at Sebring March 24 when FBI agents told her Wilder was a wanted man. She drove her Aston Marton Nimrod in the race, Wilder was scheduled to drive his Porsche, but didn't show up.

Later convinced of the truth, she began to recall details she had overlooked before, she said. She remembered attending a fashion show with Wilder at which he knew the name of every model on the stage before it was announced, and remembered that he had acted very nervous and strange when she bumped into him at a shopping mall one day.

"There is a mountain of horrible things he did. Maybe the darker side was the real Chris," she said. "But how could he function so normally for so long, I don't know. It's a Jekyll and Hyde thing. It's beyond my comprehension."

SAT tests are under fire

PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE

Critics have pointed to the 20-year decline in Scholastic Aptitude Test scores as evidence of the dismal state of our schools. Now some educators are beginning to strike back with criticism of the SATs. They say that, as a means of predicting future academic success, the tests are little better than flipping a coin. The correlation between high school grades and college achievement is four times higher. But that doesn't mean the SAT's don't measure anything. A 1980 Nader report says they are extremely accurate in revealing... parental income.

How long does it take you to get to work in the morning? If you're like most folks, the answer is between 15 and 30 minutes. Only one lucky worker in eight lives within 15 minutes of the job, while about one in 20 spends over an hour commuting each way.

Missiles, tanks and warships are expensive, but the Pentagon still manages to come up with some spare change for the finer things in life. In addition to the usual list of death-dealing weapons, military expenditures in 1983 included $4.6 million for "perfumes, toilet preparations and powders." Could this be some new form of chemical warfare?

CLAST

Nobody could fault Gov. Bob Graham, or the state Legislature, for wanting to improve higher education in Florida. But there are ways, and there are ways—and the College Level Academic Skills Test, the CLAST, isn't a good one.

CLAST isn't a good idea because it will do exactly what its detractors—among them Rep. Al Lawson, D-Tallahassee, and Sen. Carrie Meek, D-Miami—say it will do It will bar a significant number of black and minority students from degree programs in Florida's universities.

Black students don't do as well as their white counterparts on standardized tests, and educators say that has a lot to do with the attitude parents, teachers and guidance counselors have toward the black student. Unfortunately, unless he or she excels in athletics, there are still a lot of schools in Florida that don't encourage the black student to take college preparatory courses. It's an insidious process that often starts in the home—studies confirm black parents are much less likely than white parents to believe their children will enroll in college, let alone earn a degree.

When black students aren't encouraged by either parents or teachers to take college preparatory courses, it's not surprising to find many of them arrive at Florida's state universities and community colleges less well-prepared for college work than white students.

Yet CLAST asks those students to measure up to their more privileged counterparts within two years. The test, which students must pass to earn an Associate of Arts degree or take junior and senior level college courses, asks black students to make up their own deficiencies or suffer the consequences.

In that sense, CLAST is punitive. The teachers who didn't teach black students well aren't being penalized—the students pay twice; first, with an inferior education, and again when they face the CLAST.

If the state of Florida could assure every student, black or white, Asian or Hispanic or Indian, a good general education in the elementary schools and adequate college preparatory work in its high schools, then CLAST might make sense. Then the only students who should fail the test then are the students who just didn't take advantage of the opportunity the state offered.

The fact that most black students are less well-prepared to do college work than white students should tell the state that black students aren't getting their fair share of Florida's educational opportunities.

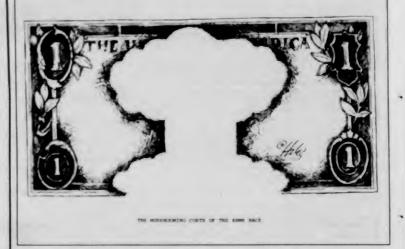

When black students arrive at the university less prepared to do college work than white students, it's both illogical and unfair to expect a test like the CLAST to solve the problem. The problem started long before the black student entered a university—and until the state improves educational opportunities for blacks in Florida's elementary and high schools we can expect more blacks than whites to fail tests like the CLAST.

And the state of Florida is being grossly negligent if it expects minority students to do on their own in two years what the state, with all its resources, failed to do in twelve.

A strange place

1 ditor

As I look around me today and see what is so hopefully referred to as America by many peoples of this troubled world, I become more puzzled than ever by this strange land. We have everything and yet, at times, it seems we have nothing. Money, drugs, 24-hour stores, TV and restaurants, a sexual revolution, and then again, poverty, hunger, drug abuse, loss of trust, a perverse nationalism. A culture? For a nation which produces the highest technology we are sadly unaware of the world around us and how the slightest finger-tip move of our nation sends ripples all across the nations.

A famous man once said, or should have, "If you would understand your homeland, leave it for a time, return and see with new eyes." I have done just that, having lived for extended periods in West Germany and Italy and visited in East Germany and Czechoslovakia. Let me tell you America, you've got something here. There is no place like the U.S.A and when I look at our flag I feel a sense of patriotism which many of my peers would scoff at, but I am not blind. If more of us could visit for a time in the East Bloc and really see it, I feel that there would be fewer empty political grumblings mong our radicals and leftists. Fewer Moral Majority types trying to impose a Soviet-like, 'Christian" regime on their fellow Americans. Maybe not. Maybe we are all doomed to narrowand short-sightedness. Just one thing-

As college students we have a unique opportunity (and I'm not referring to the graduation speech goout-and-change-the-world kind). No one around here is going to change the world, unless hidden among us is another Gandhi waiting for his moment. There is something that every one of us who attends an institution of higher education should be doing. It is the national pasttime in countries like West Germany. It is reading.

It is typical at a German university that a student skips a lecture and sits down with a few carefully selected magazines and newspapers and critically reads them to see what is really going on in his world. You are not going to get a complete education at this university unless you educate yourself. If you doubt the importance of being aware of and involved in the cultures and people at home and abroad, then you are living in a vacuum and there, as a nation, we will suffocate

Lesotho's plight

Editor

As someone who lived for four years in Lesotho, working for the National University of Lesotho and its predecessor. I welcome the article in Friday's Flambeau on that country. Lesotho's plight is real and close to desperate. The article on the whole gave a reasonable impression, but I would like to correct two misleading statements.

First, the author claims that Lesotho is one of the largest per-capita aid recipients in the world. This is a widespread impression, but a false one. According to World Bank data, in 1979 Lesotho received net aid of under $49 per capita (mostly from Europe); eight countries in sub-Saharan Africa alone received higher amounts, including two (Botswana and Mauritania) which received over $100 per capita, although their situations seem far less serious than Lesotho's. For comparison, for fiscal year 1984 the Reagan administration requested total U.S. aid for Israel of about $600 per acapita.

Second, the author emphasizes Lesotho's "look of prosperity." This is a genuine and real impression, but a very one-sided and short-sighted one. If the author had managed to get a few hundred meters away from a tarred road, even in the capital city, she would also have seen devastating poverty. In rural areas, those people—especially widows, single women, deserted wives and their children—without access to the earnings of migrants are often desperately poor, in a climate where there is far more snow and frost than in Tallahassee.

But congratulations to the Flumbeau for carrying an article on this little-known country, which in many ways is an unfortunate innocent bystander that suffers from the consequences and spillovers of the inequities of the South African system.

students still aren't taking CLAST seriously, probably because up until now sophomores didn't have to have an acceptable CLAST score to get into the upper division.

"You always had to have a CLAST score to get into the upper division from the time testing started," McClanahan said. "There was just no approved score, so students got the idea the test didn't count. I think they thought the state was just testing its silly old test, and didn't need them to do it. We had a girl just recently who was all ready to graduate and take a good job with an airline, when she got a letter saying she wasn't going to get a diploma because she didn't have a CLAST score. It's a shame, but when things like that happen word gets around."

McClanahan and Simmons stress that it doesn't matter when a student took the test — if you're applying to the upper division starting August 1, you must have acceptable CLAST scores a 260 in Reading and Computation, a 265 in Writing and a four or above on the essay.

"Let's say you took the test in 1982, and then left school — if you're coming back this fall, you'll still have to present acceptable scores," McClanahan said. "It doesn't matter when you took the test — the requirement start in August."

Does McClanahan think CLAST in punitive to minority students?

"Sometimes people make it sound like the white world the state legislators — designed it with the idea of getting blacks out of the universites — and I'm sure it wasn't designed with that in mind," McClanahan said.

"It is true blacks, for whatever reason, are less wellprepared coming out of high school," said McClanahan, "but the answer isn't to do away with the effort the state is making to improve higher education."

You have to start in the grade schools, and in the high schools, "McClanahan said. "As Commissioner (of Education Ralph) Turlington said, social promotion is rampant in Florida schools. I have no data to prove it, but I suspect minorities have been more victimized by social promotion — and that teachers in the elementary and high schools have taken less time, at least in the past, with black students."

McClanahan admitted changes at the grade school and high school level wouldn't help students who are educationally disadvantaged and facing the CLAST requirement now.

"That's where remedial education and programs like Horizons Unlimited and the language labs come in," McClanahan said. "But even if you want to set up a new remediation apparatus specifically for CLAST, it's first priority should be to work itself out of a job in five or six years."

McClanahan sees more help for disadvantaged students coming from another legislatively-mandated test — a diagnostic test similar to the CLAST that high school seniors or entering freshmen would take to determine their particuar weaknesses.

Such a test is provided for in the original CLAST legislation, and, according to McClanahan, it's in the planning stages now.

"The value of the test would be that you could more or less tailor a student's freshman and sophomore years to stengthen their individual weakness," said McClanahan. "For example, their basic math skills might be good, but they blow the questions on plane geometry — you then have a pretty good idea of what mathcoursethey need to take first."

According to Herbert Andrews, president of the Black Student Union at FSU, however, the state shouldn't implement the exam without programs to offset its effect on minorities.

"Personally, I disagree with it altogether," said Andrews. "I agreed with what Al Lawson did, and we're all hurt it went the way it did in the Legislature. "But if they're going to have the CLAST, then they should have programs specifically for passing the test.

"Yes, we have Horizons Unlimited, but that's not specifically for the test," said Andrews. "CLAST doesn't offer any other roads — it's like they're saying, 'If you don't got it, forget it.' There should be remedial course designed for helping students pass each part of the exam—so if you fail the math part, you go right into a specific remedial math course to help you pass it next time."

Andrews says he also worries about how seriously students take CLAST — a concern he shares with both McClanahan and Simmons.

"I think a lot of students who took it in March still think it didn't count," Andrews said. "A lot of people

'There should be remedial courses designed for helping students pass

-BSU president

have been telling me, 'Oh, I took it then but it doesn't count for my group,' and I keep telling them, 'Oh, yes, it does.'"

Simmons said she sees a lot of avoidance behavior students who know they have to take the CLAST, but keep putting it off. She says a few students may have slipped by the requirement in the past at FAMU, but a new computer program will prevent that in the future

McClanahan says FSU students who fail to take the test will find a "stop" put on their registration when they go to pick up their schedules, if they've registered for upper division courses.

"Something always seems to be happening when we give the test," McClanahan said. "It's spring break and people want to stay on the beach at Fort Lauderdale, or it's the Auburn game — we pray for rain on days we give the test so we don't have to look at so many long faces."

McClanahan says the best time to take the test is the semester a sophomore will accumulate 60 hours of course work, generally the second semester of the sophomore year. Freshmen currently cannot take the test, even if they think they could pass it.

McClanahan and Simmons also want students to know there's no fee for taking the test. CLAST is free — at least for the student. McClanahan says last year it cost approximately $10,000 at FSU just to register sophomores for, and administer, the CLAST test.

How do FSU and FAMU generally stack up against the other state universities in CLAST scores?

The University of Florida is always at the top, FAMU at the bottom and FSU right in the middle. Simmons says she doesn't consider either Tallahassee school as necessarily making a poor showing, even give the numerical results.

"You'd expect the University of Florida, which attracts some of the best students and does the most screening, to be on top," Simmons said. "I suspect FSU has considerably more minority students, foreign students and non-traditional students than the University of Florida — maybe FSU and FAMU should be considered as giving more people a chance.

"I have friends who teach in North Carolina who are always telling me how well their school, which accepts only students in the top percentiles, is doing," said Simmons. "And I always think, "Well, anybody can do well with the best students — all you have to do is leave them alone. But if you can take students who wouldn't get a chance at a top university and do something with them, then you're accomplishing something."

It's mid-session: Do you know where your therapist is?

BY D.K. ROBERTS

Slouching towards the middle of the Session. Even your shoes are dog tired. Look at them: wobbly, histreless, fed up with your feet. They're sick of the Capitol fourth floor Shark Pit. They're sick of the coffee line in the cafeteria in the cruel early morning. You need therapy. They need a shine.

There's a pro who conveniently hangs out around the House and Senate info desk. You can make an appointment in advance or hope he can wiggle you in somewhere between policy decisions and Who's Who customers. He is called Shedrick Brown. He comes downtown in black tie and a little pearl ring. He's got long fingernails and Michael Jackson ringlets. What he does to your shoes is like sending them off to a posh French health spa for a stress-resi cure only they don't ever leave your feet. He is a shoe shine artistic.

Shedrick Brown hands you his card. It has a tiny picture of the maestro in action and says "Shoe Doctor Co." You ask how business is and he allows as how it's great but he doesn't care. He hands you another card. It reads "Brown & Associates: Professional Lobbist. Shedrick Brown, Executive Consultant." The printer missed out the 3 in lobbists. The great seal of Florida is printed in gold at the top and it says THE SUNSHINE STATE at the bottom. Shedrick Brown, says he isn't interested in the shoe shine trade so much because he is really the head of this company which lobbies for certain causes. You ask who he lobbies for. He says he lobbies for himself. "Tin president and chairman of the board of my corporation." He says he's a Vietnam ver so he lobbies for things to do with Agent Orange.

What does shoe shining have to do with powerbroking? He say shoe shining is evangelical: he meets people, he makes contacts, he influences voting, he's a more powerful man than anyone knows. Besides, he makes some good money. His fees start at $3.00. But he tells you straight off: "I'm very selective about my clientele."

Point de vice shoes are part of an overall personal and social philosophy. Shedrick Brown maintains: "A gentleman knows when he needs a shoe shire. And gentleman never asks me what I charge. If he asks me, he can't afford me and he is not a gentlemanl want as part of my clientele. I'm what you call exclusive."

Lask him if women like to have their shoes shined and he says ob yes, lots do. But he'd rather do gentlemen's shoes. His favorite is Bally—fine Swiss shoes. He is wearing a pair of Florsheims, today. He says he has a collection of shoes at home—some very old but all looking brand new. He knows how to treat them. He says, "I've got some gator shoes from when they could still shoot gators. I don't wear them very much. But I condition them." He explains that shoes don't forget that they were once off a living animal. In the middle of this he looks across the room and nods to an acquaintance and client—"there's Don Tucker." He says "yeah, a lot of the senators, of course, wear Pierre Cardin." He shakes his head. "But I'm serious now. The molecules in your shoes are alive. You got to feed them."

I tell him it was great talking to him. I don't dare ask him to shine my shoes for any price

There's a false quiet in the afternoon Capitol. This is my last legislative column for this year—Leaving midway through the fun is like missing As the World Turns when Steve and Betsy finally get together—However, the blessed Bodleian waits. And it's champagne-and-strawberries season in England. What's more, the glasses there are real glass. There are consolations

I hope I'll be back next year for all the glamor and glitter of the Tower of Power. The Florida Legislature has the gold-leafed gaudy appeal of Cecil B. De Milles' finest—conspicuous spending of vast sums of money on the most ephemeral if entertaining of pantomines. Only in the Florida Legislature, the conspicuous spending is real. And it's your money.

I'm getting out while the molecules in my shoes are still kicking.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT A G F E

EDITOR: Jeff Kottkamp

Remarks on Student Government

By Tom Abrams Student Body President and Sue Schussier Student Body Vice-President-

Why is there such a thing as Student Government at Florida State University? What has it accomplished this year? What can it do in the future? Student Government easts for three fundamental reasons. First, it represents studients interests in the university and outside of it Second, it controls large amounts of student-contributed fees. Third, if gives students the apportunity to become involvriid in, and understand, government in general Everything that can conceivably bie done to give students more voice in the way of things and more involvement and understanding tau to gain a the accomplishing of just this is the objective of Student Governmount

Upon entering office, our most pressing concern was to open Studient Government to all interested students Every Wednesday we held "open colored meetings, where the problems facing students were voiced and megazins to solve these problems were planned and taken. We soon realized that lack of communication batwaren students and their Student Government was the problem to be overcome, we acted. The Action Information Network was formed this network gives any student group, through its representative a direct link with Student Government and all its resources. Our next major project in the area of communication was launching of an all-out effort to establish a student-run radio station. This station, if approved by the proper F.C.C. agencies, will provide students with, besides excellent entertainment, information and a chance to gain the practical experience of contributing to such an effort

Other initiatives were taken up by Student Government on behalf and in the interest of students. These include the following: financing improvements in recreational facilities, improvement handicap facilities, contacting potential contributors to student discount cords. taking steps to increase security on compus, and lining up a diverse group of guest speakers. In addition, this year the Securitie and Legislative Branches of Studiet Government have proposed to the Faculty Senate the idea of adopting a system of more accurate grading —one that adds pluses and minuses to the present grading system.

Such major projects undertaken by Subject Government in behalf of students are all the more reason for students to become part of Studient Government The more the true sentment of the students a heard, the more their needs will be met Instead at thinking of Student Government as something detached from studiints, our year long goal was to make it the voice of the students. We urge all students to truly become part of Studient Government join or granulations, run for Senate seat and vote. May the general will of studients become the will of Student Government. We have made progress, much more awarts

Proposed: A Plus/Minus Grading System Passed By Faculty Senate

Tom Abrams and Sue Schussler were elected Student Boby President and Vice-President on a platform which, as one its planks, aimed lowards the goal of refining the present grading system. After extensive research the Executive Branch of Student Government concluded that the most advantageous means lowards this end was the incorporation of pluses and minuses into the present grading system. A proposal to adopt such a policy was submitted to the Student Senate. On January 18, 1984, the 36th Student Senate, motivated by the strength and desirability of the following three points, overwhelmingly approved a resolution urging the Faculty Senate to seriously consider the value of plus/minus grading system.

First, a plus/minus system is more accurate than the present grading system, students will truely receive that which they deserve. The performance of a high "B" and that of a low "B" are not one and the same, it is untail that they be reported as if they were.

Second, the system would provide Incentive to many students who, under the present grading system, accept for fact that an entire letter grade immprovement is unrealistic goal. The preservation, throughout the entire semester, of whatever incentive grades offer is in the best interest of all involved in the educational process. It will always be possible that by some final effort, a student may increase her or his grade point average.

Third, and of utmost importance, as a result of its possibility for greater precision and differentiation, this system will, in many cases, be viewed by others as being more representative of a student's university performance. Simply stated, a plus/minus system is highly credible. This credibility amounts to a firm base from which students may launch their career moves.

To the objection that a plus/minus system provides too much precision ("those people are trying to make a science out of what is not"), it should be kept in mind that no professor need assign pluses and minuses; it would simply be their option.

In the Faculty Senate, both the Undergraduate Policy Committee and the Graduate Policy Committee recommended that, in principle, the Senate as a whole adopt a plus/minus system. However, on March 18, 1984, the Senate decided it more desirable to send the issue of plus/minus system back to committee.

Below is the actual plus/minus system recommended by the Student Senate to the Faculty Senate

Ron's off to China

HONOLULU - President Reagan, standing at a crossroads of the Pacific at the midpoint of "a long journey for peace," issued an Easter holiday call for an end to war on Sunday and voiced hope his visit to China will further this goal.

"I ask for the prayers of all Americans and the peoples of the world for peace among men, for peace among nations," Reagan said in remarks prepared for the start of a two-day rest stop on the road to China

"Let the nations and peoples of the world renounce war," he said "Let us pledge ourselves to its permanent abolition. Let us forsake its anguish and agony and live in love with one another "

The president and Nancy Reagan began Easter Sunday by wrapping up three days of peace and solitude at their mountaintop ranch and boarding Air Force One for a 2,615-mile flight to Honolulu-the second of three rest stops on a 11,190-mile week long trip to China

With the White House determined to keep the spotlight focused on the China journey - the first by an American president since 1975 — Reagan draped his trip in lofty goals during an arrival ceremony at Hickam Air Force Base

"We want to say how thrilled we are to begin this long journey for peace in this place of overpowering beauty and tranquility," he said. "It is also appropriate that this journey should begin on Faster Sunday - a day of peace proclaimed, a day of triumph over evil and suffering

Voicing hope the day will come "when mankind will renounce forever the use of force," Reagan, whose political advisers are eager to cast him in the role of campaign-year peacemaker, said, "It is our fervent hope that the events of the coming week will also bring us closer to that day

"The United States is resolved to avoid war, pursue peace and to do so by remaining strong and remaining ready," Reagan declared

In a somber reminder of the attack that drew the United States into war against Japan in 1941, Reagan said the people of Hawaii "have known first hand the destruction wrought by nations that take up arms against one

Reagan, a long-time friend of Taiwan, displayed none of his previous animosity toward the normalization of relations with China undertaken by President Carter Baring the more pragmatic approach he has taken since assuming office, he called the evolution of U.S.-Sino relations over the last 12 years "one of the critical developments in our country's postwar foreign relations '

"This week, we hope to continue that process of reconciliation," he said "I believe the mission we undertake is another careful, yet sure step towards peace and friendship between the Chinese and American people

Reagan described the significance of his two week journey in terms broader than the improvement of bilateral relations with China. He said it highlights the growing importance of closer relations among all nations of the . Pacific

"The Pacific Basin is one of the fastest growing markets for American goods, services and investments," he said. "To a great extent, our nation's future is in the Pacific."

Except for a private meeting with Adm. William Crowe, commander in chief of the U.S. Pacific Command, Reagan was to spend all of Monday reviewing China Briefing materials and conferring with his foreign policy advisers

MUTLANGEN, West Germany— Authorities rushed extra police Sunday to the U.S. military base at Mutlangen after an American solider had to fire warning shots for the first time to stop protestors from breaking into the facility.

The shots were fired into the air late Saturday when some 40 demonstrators cut through the outer barbed wire fence with wire cutters and four of them broke through onto the base as part of a nationwide Easter weekend anti-nuclear campaign. There were no injuries.

It was the first time U.S. guards have opened fire at the base, seen of dozens of large protests and several break-ins since at least one battery of Pershing 2 missiles were deployed there but November.

CHICAGO — A massive storm moving east from the Rockies sent tornadoes apinning through Alabama Sunday, as officials searched for bodies in wreckage left by Mississippi twisters. The weekend storm's death toll mounted to at least 16.

The storm rolled into the Midwest, with up to 6 inches of snow greeting Iowans especting a spring day for Easter Sunday. The storm left more than 13 inches of snow on the ground in Denver—inspiring residents who created large Easter bunnes and other creatures from the snow in their sards.

ATLANTA — Doctors at the Centers for Disease Control said Sunday they believe a French scientist, has discovered the virus that causes AIDS and the discovery could lead to a vaccine against the deadly disease.

Dr. James O. Mason, the chief of the federal health agency, called the discovery a "significant breakthrough. It is an exciting development."

Mason said the discovery could eventually lead to development of a vaccine against AIDS, but that such a vaccine could take many years to make.

He said the more immediate effects of the discovery may be development of a diagnostic test for AIDS and a test to help in prevention.

WASHINGTON — Family violence claims at least 450,000 victims a year in the United States, striking women and low income people most often, the Justice Department said Sunday.

A study by the department's Bureau of Justice Statistics found that the majority of reported violence within families — 57 percent — is committed by spouses or exspouses, and many incidents behind closed doors are never reported.

Family violence if "a significant problem of large, and currently illunderstood proportions," the study concludes "It is the crime that touches all income levels but is highest among lower income women," Patsy Blaus, a bureau statistician, said in a telephone interview

Great Britain breaks relations with Libya

UNITED PRES INTERNATIONAL

LONDON — Britain broke off dipolmatic relations with Libya Sunday and ordered the Libyans holed up in Tripoli's besieged embassy to leave the country within seven days.

Libya expressed "surprise and indignation" but announced no retaliatory measure against 8,000 Britons living in the North African nation.

The explusion order included any other Libyan diplomats in Britain. Home Secretary Leon Brittain conceded the gunman who killed a British policewoman when the siege began last Tuesday would probably go free.

Foreign Office Minister Richard Luce said the British Embassy in Tripoli would be closed and its staff withdrawn by the end of April.

"The British government has decided to break relations forthwith with Libya," Luce said at a news conference

"We have given all Libyan diplomatic staff in London and anyone else currenly in the People's Bureau until midnight on April 30 to vacate the premises and leave the country. We shall make arrangements for their safe passage out of the country."

Brittain warned it would be a "grave matter" if the Libyans did not leave by the deadline. After that day, they will lose diplomatic immunity and the police could theoretically move in.

The embassy has been surrounded by British security forces since Tuesday, when a gunman inside the 18th century townhouse fired a machine gun at anti-Khadafy demonstrators outside, killing 25-year-old policewoman Yvonne Fletcher and wounding 11 protesters.

Col Moammar Khadafy's government said through Labya's official Jamahiriyah News Agency that Britain's unilateral decision to sever relations was received with "extreme surprise and indignation." It blamed American and Israeli pressures for the break

The agency, in a dispatch monitored in London, also said Britons in Libya would be safe and said no retaliation was being taken immediately since all decisions must be ruade by the Basic People's Congresses, the decision-makers in Libya.

"Libya did not want diplomatic relations broken," a source in Tripoli said, "They did not believe that diplomatic relations would be broken."

Loce said London acted because of Col Moammar Khadafy's intransigence during the six-day siege of the Libyan Embassy on St. James Square in central London, named the "People's Bureau" by Tripoli.

Khadafy rejected British demands that he "instruct those inside the Bureau to leave the building and to allow it to be searched for weapons and explosives. This request has been repeatedly refused," Luce said

The volatile Libyan leader proposed Saturday that a Libyan team travel to London to investigate the shooting. Under international law, Britain needed Libyan permission to enter the mission.

President Reagan supported Britain's decision, an administration spokesman said

Planning our defense: Cheaper is also safer

last in a series

BY MICHAEL KLARE AND FRANZ SCHURMANN

Far more is at stake in the growing controversy over the size of the defense budget than saving a few billion dollars here and there. The real question is whether we can afford to maintain that whole architecture of defense commitments we have been erecting since the end of World War II.

It is increasingly apparent that we must revise the policies adopted in the early Cold War era, when the "mational security" concept first became embedded in our policy making machinery. The pressure for change comes from mushrooming costs, but also from two other factors: doubts about the global scale of America's military commitments, and doubts about the nuclear assumptions built into existing war planning.

The national security concept arose in the late 1940s as a counterpoint to the traditional concept of "defense." Originally, defense meant protecting the United States and its territories against hostile attack. This approach, which emerged in the founding days of the republic, governed U.S. military policy for nearly two centuries.

But in the wake of World War II, U.S. leaders assumed responsibility for management of international stability. This globalization of our defense posture was justified with the term national security. We became the world's policeman at the same time that we entrusted our ultimate defense to a massive nuclear arsenal.

But nuclear "defense" has not brought us true security, and "national security" has entangled us in distant commitments of great cost and dubious advantage. This perception is shared by the general public as well as by military experts of every political opinion. A new guiding principle, therefore, is essential.

There are three ways to go

We can continue on the old national security road,

COMMENTARY

tinkering with budgets and commitments to make them more "cost-effective" and manageable

Or we can abandon many overseas commitments and return to a policy based primarily on defense of the United States.

Or, finally, we can seek new concepts to replace the old ones. This route, we believe, is the only one that makes any real sense

True, "defense," as traditionally conceived, must remain a cornerstone of our military policy. Every nation legitimately seeks to defend itself against attack, and the principle of self-defense is implanted in our Constitution.

But today defense must be paired with a second basic principle international security. Nuclear weapons and a global economy have created an interdependent world, and there can be no national security without international security. Even if it were possible to construct a totally leak proof shield against incoming missiles—something no eminent scientist would predict—the United States can never prosper while the rest of the world smolders in ruins.

We, therefore, need a military posture that envisions

- First, a force structure designed for defense and international security.
- Second, an enlightened diplomacy to bring about meaningful arms control and the peaceful resolution of conflict.
- Third, a sound economic policy for promoting worldwide economic prosperity.

This new approach has many concrete implications. Beginning with defense, we must abandon the policy of "extended deterrence" that ties our nuclear forces to unpredictable developments around the world. Nuclear weapons, if they exist at all, must be used for one purpose only to deter a nuclear attack on the United States.

To be consistent, we should also abandon the so-called

"strategic triad," under which we maintain entirely separate nuclear forces intercontinental missiles, bombers and missile armed submarines submarine fleet alone provides the necessars deterrent strength with an assurance of survivability that none of the other forces can

Furthermore, we must link active defense measures with equally active diplomacy to secure new arms control agreements than ensure symmetry in nuclear capabilities and substantially reduce the world's nuclear stockpiles We also need agreements restricting the deployment of "tactical" nuclear weapons and establishing "nuclearfree" zones in likely conflict areas

As for international security, we must begin with the principle of non-intervention in internal or purely local conflicts, such as those now underway in Central America and the Persian Gulf. We do require a capability to keep sital sea lanes open and to "quarantine" local conflicts so they cannot spread. This means renouncing the "force projection" mission of U.S. forces-their capacity to enter foreign battle zones forcibly and enhancing our capability for "sea control" and regional peacekeeping

This shift will require a significant its existing division type structure and regroup as a light force with special training rescue, anti-tetrorism and true peacekeeping duties. Units committed to the Rapid Deployment Force should be disbanded and replaced with engineer-type units capable of assisting impoverished Third forces in Germans should be scaled down. de nuclearized and pulled back to a reserve position from which they can plug any gaps that might develop in European defense

This is a more modest U.S. military posture but one that supports out fundamental interests at a cost we can safely bear. It also is a posture that rectuees the risk of both nuclear conflict and of U.S. involvement in Vietnam type quagnities in the Third World

In sum, our new goals for defense should he self-defense, arms control and war violence. For international security, they should be regional stability and peace seeking. Finally, to help sustain the world economy, out military forces should assist in the protection of international trade and the promotion of economic development

Michael Alare is a fellow of the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C. Fran; Schurmann's professor of history and sociology at the University of California at

The real question is whether we can afford to maintain the whole architecture of defense commitments we have been erecting since the end of World War II.

transformation of our tactical force structure. The Navy should trade in its giant, attack oriented aircraft carriers and battleships for smaller but more numerous sea control vessels destroyers, frigates and carriers equipped with vertical takeoff aircraft. The Marine Corps should abandon

Those existing U.S. force deployments that clearly help maintain established Last West boundaries, as in Europe and Korea, should be preserved. But primary responsibility for the delense of these areas should be borne by the nations directly involved. U.S. ground

If you can't find a place to park, at least you're not alone

BY SARAH RANKIN

Denham, McCue, Quinn, Carney, Gilligan — the names don't mean much unless you've had occasion to deal with the Coordinator of Parking Services at Florida State University in the last six years.

The position comes with pressure and headaches absent from many jobs with three times the pay. The workday starts at 7-30 a.m. and runs full-speed through 4-30 p.m. Lunch is often wolfed down between phone calls, and there is no pay for overtime.

Given the job, it is not surprising that FSU has had five different people as Parking Services Coordinator in the last six years. For seven months in 1980, no one occupied the continuous.

I made an appointment with Al Gilligan, the current Coordinator of Parking Services, out of frustration. It seemed incredible to me that, in the eleven years since I last attended FSU, nothing had been done to improve the parking situation. I wanted to know why no parking garages had been built, who established parking policies and fines at FSU, and where all the money collected was going.

I also wanted to know if there was an acutal human being presiding over this madness. I expected Mr. Gilligan would be a wirened old bureaucrat — or worse, a slick, facile, young bureaucrat not at all concerned with the daily frustration of more than 10,000 students trying to park in less than 3,000 spaces on campus.

And I was sure his car would be parked in a reserved space within spitting distance of his desk

Almost on time, a man in his early thirties appeared from behind a partition, introduced himself, and showed me into his small office. He were tan trousers, and very unbureaueratic looking Hushpuppies. We talked for an hour and a half while his phone rang and his intercom buzzed incressantly.

Gilligan said 10,922 student decals — "W" stickers — had been issued in 1982-83. Spaces for students totaled 2,718 (excluding 889 spaces in Campbell Stadium). Faculty and staff decals — "R" and "RT" stickers — for the same period numbered 2,785 with 2,071 campus spaces available.

These statistics told only half the story. In that same period, four times as many parking citations were issued to unregistered cars as to cars with decals. Students trying to find parking on campus in the daytime have far less than a one-in-four chance of doing so.

Cilligan said an accurate count of the cars parking on campus is impossible, but it is certainly greater than decal sales indicate. Students trying to find a parking place on campus in the daytime have far less than a one-in-four chance of doing so.

Other complications include the 4,000 students living on campus whose cars take up spaces more or less twenty-four hours a day

Parking policies and fines at FSU were initially established by the Board of Regents in accordance with policies governing other state universities in Florida. Policies are subject to review by the Parking Services Advisory Committee composed of four student representatives and five representatives from various departments of FSU administration.

As head of the Office of Parking Services, Gilligan prepares agenda items for the Parking Services Advisory Committee and reports to B.J. Hodge, Vice-President for Administrative Affairs. Vice-President Hodge has the final word regarding which programs are actually implemented.

The major hitch in implementing programs to alleviate the lack of parking spaces at FSU is, of course, money

As an auxiliary service to FSU, Parking Services receives no state money. It must function on the funds generated by decal sales and parking fines. Last year, all of the $369,000 collected in fines went to fund the campus bus system, maintain existing lots on campus, and pay the sixteen full-time and six part-time Parking Services employees.

In order for FSU to receive state funds to improve the parking situation, both the Board of Regents and the Legislature would have to make it a priority. None of the members of the Board of Regents, nor the Legislature have to park at ISU on a daily basis, and every year parking gets shuffled to the bottom of the list below academic and sport concern.

In addition, the cost of building a parking garage for only 500 spaces is a staggering $3 million (or $6,000 per space).

And, as Gilligan points out, even if a parking garage was built in the middle of Landis Green, people at either end of campus would still complian about how far they had to walk. The price of building smaller garages at strategic places around campus would be even more exorbitant.

Born and raised in Long Island, New York, Gilligan has little sympathy for students who complain about walking several blocks or riding the bus from Campbell Stadium. He did admit, however, that there are problems with the bus system when it is raining and at some peak periods.

Gilligan asked why I minded riding the bus, and I said that asked from losing an hour out of my day, getting souking wet in the rain, being sufficiated in a crush of bodies on buses designed for twenty-nine but carrying fifty people, there wasn't anything I minded about riding the bus.

Cilligan winced and went on to discuss the space allocation study he was conducting and his plans for improving the parking situation with the limited resources available

This summer, the dirt lot at Tully Gym will be paved, and Gilligan has recommended turning the lower portion of the Diffenbaugh lot (across Jefferson Street) into a pay lot open to students for 25¢. He has also recommended eliminating the visitor status of the metered spaces outside Westcott so that anyone may park there.

Future considerations include lowering parking fines, instituting small-car-only lots which would increase the number of spaces in any given area by 20 percent and establishing an intracampus tram system.

Of all the adeas Gilligan presented, the tram system sounded most innovative. Right now, FSU Parking Services pays $111,000 annually to rent two-and a-half buses (two buses running all day, and one bus running from 8.00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.). This cost includes fuel and drivers. FSU could buy a tram system for $113,000, but would have to pay for fuel, drivers and maintenance.

In the long run, Parking Services might save money by paying a one-time fee to own the trains and could add more trains and more routes as needed in the future. Eventually there might even be money left over to start a fund for parking garages.

Visions of an efficient future train system, however, do little to quell the frustration of 23,655 FSU student trying to find parking spaces that aren't there. But it helps to know where Gilligan parks his car—anywhere he can find a space

Peterson testing the waters on drinking age hike proposal

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

As the midpoint of the 1984 legislative session approaches, Senate President Curtis Peterson is trying to line up House support for restoring Florida's legal drinking age to 21

Only if he has a strong indication that the House Regulated Industries Committee will change its 11-8 vote against the idea — or House Speaker Lee Moffitt will permit a floor vote without committee action — will Peterson permit the senate to vote on a pending proposal to raise the drinking age.

Peterson, who opposed reducing it to 18 a decade ago and voted to raise it to 19 three sessions ago, said he is confident a constitutionl amendment by Sen. Dick Langley, R-Clermont, or a bill by Sen. Don Childers, D-West Palm Beach, would get 28 to 30 votes in the 40-seat senate. The proposals are currently languishing in the Senate Commerce Committee, stymied by a legislative protocol—dictated by political reality—which dictates that one chamber does not bother with bills already killed in the other chamber.

Peterson, who personally prefers the statute approach rather than a constitutional amendment, said we will be contacting House members this week to see if the needed two-thirds support can be mustered to override the adverse House committee vote.

"I need to work with the House leadership," said Peterson. "The only problem is that I have a lot of priorities that I'm trying to attend to and I haven't had the time to attend to it as much as I'd like."

Legislative rules require a two-thirds vote to bypass committees. If assured such support exists in the House, Peterson said he would go ahead with the Childers bill and send it over for floor action.

I think I need to know whether the House is willing to take our bill up by two-thirds vote," he said. "I think it would pass the senate fairly comfortably. — 28, 29 or 30 votes — but I don't want the senate to be embarrassed by going out on a limb to do something and then the House doesn't act on it."

Peterson said the drinking age proposal has been before state lawmakers several times before, and that all members are familiar with statistics on drunken driving arrests, alcohol-related fatalities and other data accumulated since the drinking age was lowered to 18. He said the House should not need further committee hearings on the Childers bill.

"With an issue like this that's been around forever, how much more studying do you need?" he said.

Admission officers say number of college applications on the rise

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Students at Florida's universities and colleges face substantial tuition increases beginning with the fall semester, but admissions officers say they're receiving more applications than ever, a Sunday report and

Gov Bob Graham has proposed a 12.5 percent tuition hike at Florida's public institutions and the state's private colleges are raising fees an average of eight percent.

Yet admissions officials say an upswing in the economy and better marketing strategies are prompting a surge in applications, the Orlando Sentinel reported. Rollins College in Winter Park, one of the most expensive in the state, attracts students with an elite image. Admissions Director Julie Ingraham said.

"We view it as the Mercedes Benz decision," she said. Rollins plans to increase its annual tuition from $6,586 to $7,221 — a 9 4 percent increase — beginning with fall semester.

Ingraham said despite its high cost compared to other Florida colleges, a Rollins diploma is a bargain compared to those from private schools in the northeast, a region that supplies a third of Rollins' students.

Florida public universities are also a bargain compared to other parts of the country. Graham's proposed tuition increase would raise students' share of their college education from 18 percent to about 20 percent, with taxpayers picking up the rest of the rah.

Nationally, students at state-supported schools pay about 24 percent of the cost of their educations

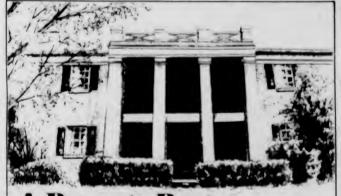

The increased applications could make it harder for students to get into some Florida colleges. The University of Miami, the largest private school in the southeast with about 14,000 students, said although its applications were up 15.4 percent this year it.

may be taking fewer students.

"We're trying to be smaller and more selective," said Assistant Admissions Director Terry Lahti

But Garry Meadows, admission director at Stestson University, said the greater number of applications may not be an indication of greater interest in college educations.

"Many of us are looking at the increase with skepticism," said Meadows. "I think that what we're going to see is that there are more students applying to three or four colleges. I would be surprised if fall enrollment is higher."

Henderson blames alcohol for racial and sexual slurs

UNITED PRINCIPITE RNATIONAL

ORLANDO—A state senator praised for his stands on conservation has apologized for using racial and sexual slurs and grabbing a female reporter during a legislative outing to a wetlands area last week.

"I had a few drinks and I was a little loose," Sen. Warren Henderson, R-Venice, said after a Saturday Orlando Sentinel story about the outing. "I want to apologize for the whole thing."

Reporters who accompanied members of the Senate Natural Resources Committee on the trip to the St. Mark's National Wildlife Refuge said Henderson joked at the expense of black Sen. Arnette Giradeau, D.Jacksonville, repeatedly referring to blacks as "niggers" and used a sexual obscenity.

Reporters also said Henderson, considered one of the Senate's leading environmentalists, picked up Orlando Sentinel reporter Donna Blanton, put her on his hip and slung her around "like a sack of potatoes."

Blanton, who is five-feet tall and weighs 100 pounds, had never before met the 20year Senate veteran and said she found the action offensive.

"The young lady, I want to go to her personally and apologize," Henderson said.

On Friday, Henderson said he didn't recall picking Blanton up and denied using sexual or racial slurs but he admitted the slurs Saturday

"There were some racial slurs," he said.

Tom Schafer, a reporter for Gannett
News Service who was on the Wednesday trip to the wildlife refuge south of Tallahassee, said he heard Henderson repeatedly use the term "niggers,"

Reporters said when someone mentioned having seen an alligator with a "black, ugly face," Henderson replied, "Girardeau's not here," in joking reference to the black senator.

Henderson denied the comments reflected on his view of black people. "This (racial slurs) is not my kind of person," he said.

Several of the senators ducked behind trees for rest stops and reporters said that when people suggested a bathroom stop so women on the trip would not have to do the same, Henderson said, "When women have equal equipment, they can have equal opportunity."

Henderson, 56, said the Wednesday trip was a "bad day" for himself.

"Gosh, I'm just sorry. I try to conduct myself reasonably in public," he said. "But we've all had those good days and had some bad days. This is one of my bad days.

Reporters said Henderson and some of the other senators drank several cans of beer on the way to the wildlife refuge. "Alcohol—it's been my best friend and my worst enemy in life," Henderson said Saturday.

Polls suggest economy is improving

PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE

More good news on the economic front—maybe too good news. A national survey by Manpower, Incorporated, the temporary help firm, found 30 percent of all businesses plan to add to their payrolls within the next three months. The company says, if its study proves accurate, we can expect labor shortages, especially among skilled white-collar workers, as soon as this summer.

Things are looking up in the Golden State: last year, when pollsters asked Californians whether their financial condition was improving, over 60 percent said "No." This year, however, more than half said "Yes." A similar poll in the Southeast part of the country came up with the same results. That's good news for the economy, and even better news for President Reagan.

So much for President Reagan's confidence in America's spirit of charity: the Internal Revenue Service says large contributions by the super-rich dropped 30 percent last year. The IRS figures, which covered donations of at least a half-million-dollars, showed colleges and non-religious groups were the hardest hit. Religious organizations were better off because they depend more on small gifts.

Bonnie and Clyde-Arthur Penn's now badly dated 1967 film shocked everyone with its graphic, carefree approach to violence. Major Barbaro—A fine 1941 film version of George Bernard Shaw's literary comedy, all about a well-to-do girl (Wendy Hiller) who inexplicably takes up with the Salvation Army, to the chagrin of those around her. A weak premise, perhaps, but done with great

After all, how often do you get to see a crazy person's deas infiltrate pop-culture, even at its lowest rung? Wood's obsessions denied him the saving grace of coherence or continuity—this film is infamous for its sudden jumps from day to night during particular scenes—but gave everything he did a nightmarish quality that's absolutely haunting if you care to investigate it. For these reasons, he's one of the Great Filmmakers, I dare say. (WCTV, cable 9, 130 a.m.)

Author Barbara Milton's work is a prizewinner

April has been anything but a cruel month for author Barbara Milton. She gave her first professional reading at Piorida State University's annual Spring Festival of Writers earlier this month. Last week, Milton received the much-respected Pushcart Prize for "The Cigarette Boat," one of four short stories in A Small Cartoon, published by Allen Woodman's Word Beat Press.

A resident of New York City, Milton could not be reached for comment. But Woodman, a local writer and doctoral student in English at FSU, contacted her early last week and said, "She was overjoyed at winning the Pushcart, especially after just coming off her visit to

The Pushcart Prize recognizes the best writing from small presses around the country. Along with the O. Henry Awards the Best American Short Stories/Martha Foley Awards, the Pushcart is highly coveted by writers. Past winners include Adrienne Rich, John Irving, Margaret Atwood, Raymond Carver and

"You can see she's in good company," said Woodman, who called "The Cigarette Boat" a "well-nigh faultless story." Lacerating and heartbreaking in many ways, it's a beautifully worked example of a demanding artist's exactitude," said Woodman. "But I think all four stories in 4 Small Cartoon are pearls. The entire book is glowing with the pure power of

The story will be included in The Pushcart Prizes: The Best of the Small Presses, a hardbound anthology which will be available this summer. Avon will republish the collection in trade paperback next spring.

"Writers dream by day of being in the Pushcart anthology," Woodman said, adding that copies of A Small Cartoon are still available in local bookstores for $5.95. Woodman said he has a few signed and numbered editions left for $20.

'Barbara Milton is a splendid writer and a splendid person," said Janet Burroway, the co-director of the FSU creative writing program and the judge who selected A Small Cartoon for the 1983 Word Beat Press Fiction Press Competition. "Milton's success all seems to be happening to her at once," Burroway said.

Asked why she chose Milton's collection for the award, Burroway said, "The freshness of her imagery seemed to get at the very core of character."

"Milton is quite pleasant and witty," FSU English professor Douglas Fowler added, "I was astounded anyone from New York City could be like that '

Fowler wrote a favorable review of A Small Cartoon in the current edition of Sun Dog Fowler wrote, "emotional states, conversations, details of characterizations, all are rendered with a near-flawless accuracy, and Milton's stories are as a result indelible and triumphant." thought "The Cigarette Boat" in particular was written with "impressive authority."

In related news, Woodman announced last Wednesday that writer and Paris Review editor George Plimpton will be the judge for the next Word Beat Press Fiction Book Competition The deadline for submissions is March 15, 1985. For more information on the competition, write to Woodman at P.O. Box 10509, Tallahassee, Florida 32302

Isn't that near British Vancouver?

Young Americans may worry about having to fight in El Salvador, Afghanistan or Iran, but they're not too sure just where those countries are. A majority of geography students at California State University in Fullerton could not find any of those hot spots on a world man. That's not all: one in six could not find the Soviet Union, and other obvious locations proved hard to track down. Between 30 and 40 percent guessed wrong when asked to point out the South Pacific, North Atlantic or France. Instructor Bill Puzo says he's not surprised. He's had the same results for the last 14 years.

What's the difference between readers and non-readers? Not a lot, according to a national survey. The poll found bookworms are just like everybody else. On the average, they have no more formal education than non-readers, and they don't differ when it comes to age, race, income, marital status or political affiliation. The survey did find, however, that women readers outnumber men three-to-two Democratic presidential candidate Jesse Jackson says he was persuaded to run because fellow Democrat Walter Mondale refused to support Harold Washington, who is black,in the Chicago mayoral race last year. Jackson was also incensed that another liberal Democrat, Sen. Edward Kennedy, endorsed incumbent Jane Byrne over Washington in the mayoral primary. He told Playboy magazine the two developments helped him decide to become the nation's first black presidential candidate.

"Our liberal allies, Kennedy and Mondale, came riding into town with smoking guns, supporting party regulars over the progressive black candidate. If Kennedy and Mondale had had their own way, Washington wouldn't have won. If it had been left to them, the rise of the black political movement would have been stopped, stillborn."

Last year's winner, Debbie McKeithan of Charlotte, N.C., was struck by a debilitating malady at age 19 that left her speechless, nearly blind and epileptic. She went on to become the founder of Handicapped Organized Women, a support group for females.

Songwriter Stevie Wonder, honored in St. Louis by the National Conference of Black Mayors, said blacks must unite politically and stop bickering. "The world needs to know that individual black leaders can differ, yet function as one," Wonder said, "When we get to be big and famous, sometimes we become too high and mighty. We become jealous over absurdities, such as the power someone has or the promotion someone has received."

The mayors praised Wonder's work in making the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday a national holiday. Singer Roberts Flack and NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks were on hand.

When 12-year-old Kelly Buntaine of St. Charles, Mo., smiled at her meeting with actress Jill Whelan, 16, of television's Love Boat, Kelly's mother said it was the first time the girl had smiled spontaneously in months. Kelly has bone cancer. The meeting Saturday at an airport in St. Louis was arranged by the St. Louis Metropolitan Dream Factory, a non-profit group that fulfills dreams of seriously ill children. In two weeks, the group will send 9-year-old Sean Shulte of St. Louis on the Love Boat itself for a trip to

Research is nibbling away at some long-standing food myths

UNITED PRESS IN DRINALBURAL

White sugar makes you hyper, and chocolate cures the blues, right? H rong. Food and mood are closely related, but new research contradicts some popular notions. Take sugar, for instance. A government psychiatrist found young boys who drank lemonade made with white sugar were less active than those who were given drinks made with other sweeteners. Studies also indicate that high-carbohydrate soft drinks will make you sleepier at bedtime than a glass of highprotein warm milk. As for chocolate, it does contain the same chemical that fights depression in your brain, but research now shows that eating a lot of chocolate won't cure lovesicknes. It will, however, give you a headache

Babies have been given a burn rap. It turns out they're not the selfish little brats they've been out to be. Researchers at the National Institute for Mental Health claim toddlers as young as ten months show definite signs of altruistic behavior. One-year-olds have been observed comforting crying playmates by stroking and sharing toys. And tots just a bit older break up fights and apologize if they hurt each other's feelings. The researchers say parents can reinforce unselfish behavior by being empathetic themselves and by disciplining their children when they hurt others

Medical researchers say cynics stand to lose more than just their illusions ... they could also lose their lives. Doctors at Duke University say a jaundiced view of the world makes you four times more likely to suffer a heart attack. Why is cynicism so bad for you? The doctors claim suspicious feelings cause the body to produce hormones that aggravate heart disease. These chemicals also make your disposition even nastier. And the meaner you get, the more likely you are to wind up in fights, triggering even more unhealthy hormones

Tongues full of love and agony

BY MARK MOBLEY

This Wednesday, students at the FSU School of Music will perform two of the great 20th century works of solo voice and chamber ensemble. Soprano Jean Wozencraft has chosen George Crumb's Ancient Voices of Children for her Wednesday afternoon recital; that evening, hornist Holly Chelton and tenor Jeff Price will perform the Sevenade for Tenor, horn and strings by Benjamin Britten. Robert Duke will conduct both performances.

American composer George Crumb (b. 1929) was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1968 for his orchestral piece Echoes of Time and the River, but he is best known for his dramatic and often ritualistic chamber works His musical materials are often much less complex than is currently fashionable, but his use is precise. His knowledge of instrumental capabilities is thorough; by a nifty bit of scoring a simple musical gesture can convey great emotion. Crumb has demonstrated that an insignificant series of notes can take on profound meanings when it is whistled or played on a musical saw.

Crumb's 1970 work Ancient Voices of Children is a cycle of songs on texts by one of Crumb's favorite poets, Frederico Garcia Lorca, Lorca, like Crumb, can say a great deal in a small space. The text of the fourth Ancient Voices song has only two lines that may be translated as "Each afternoon in Granada, a child dies each afternoon."

For Ancient Voices, Crumb selected five Lorca poems that deal with the songs and souls of children. The motherty mezzo-soprano written for Jan DeGaetani, (to be sung by Wozencraft) is complemented by a boy soprano (to be sung by soprano Freda McNair) and an ensemble that includes oboe, harp, piano, mandolin, musical saw and percussion.

Crumb himself has described his use of Lorca's words. "In Ancient Voices of Children, as in my earlier Lorca settings, I have sought musical images that enhance and reinforce the powerful, yet strangely haunting imagery of Lorca's poetry. I feel that the essential meaning of this poetry Is concerned with the most primary things: life, death, love, the smell of the earth, the sounds of the wind and the sea. These "urconcepts" are embodied in a language which is primitive and stark, but which is capable of infinitely subtle nuance." With these words, Crumb has managed to describe his own style as well as that of Lorca.

The spirit of Ancient Voices is captured in the text to the second song, "Me he perdido muchas veces por el mar."

An official of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration had toldcongressional investigators he can't supply some crucial documents because. . . his dog threw up on them. Leonard Vance, head of OSHA Health Standards, had been asked to turn over his appointment calendar in connection with charges he blocked efforts to restrict use of a cancer-causing chemical called ethylene oxide in hospitals. Vance told the investigators his records were in the back of his pickup truck when his dog got sick. He says he had no choice but to drive to the dump and get rid of them.

Translated, it reads "I have lost myself in the sea many times/with my ear full of freshly cut flowers,/with my tongue full of love and agony./I have lost myself in the sea many times/as I lose myself in the hearts of certain children."

Benjamin Britten (1913-1976) was the foremost English composer of his generation, a reputation justified by his large body of vocal music. The Serenade for tenor, horn and strings was composed on request by virtuoso hornist. Dennis Brain in 1943. Britten had just returned from America and the premiere of a large solo vocal work, the Sonnets of Michaelangelo, one of many pieces written for his lifetime companion, Sir Peter Pears.

For this work Britten colected lyric poetry by Cotton, Tennyson, Blake and Jonson, an anonymous Dirge, and a Keats sonnet. The Serenade became a popular work, Britten, Peras and Brain performed it many times until Brain was killed in an automobile accident in 1957.

In a memorial tribute, Britten wrote, "I must be grateful to Dennis for having challenged all other horn players in his playing of this piece. Some of my happiest musical experiences were conducting this work for his and Peter Pears — a succession of wonderful performances progressing from the youthful exuberance and brilliance of the early days to the maturity and deep understanding of the last few years."

Hornist Holly Chelton will perform works of Schmoll, Strauss and Britten in her doctoral chamber recital, Wed. April 24 at 4 p.m. in the New Recital Hall.

Soprano Jean Wozencraft will perform works by Argento, Bach and Crumb in her doctoral chamber recital, Wed. April 24 at 8 p.m. in the New Recital Hall.

FSU Baseball It's been a season of ups and downs

It's been a season of both disappointment and achievement for the Florida State baseball team so far this

The Seminoles, who have appeared in the NCAA playoffs a total of 21 times, sport a 39-23 record and for the first time in a few years must win the Metro Conference championship if they are to stand a realistic shot of landing an NCAA playoff bid.

It's hard to pinpoint just what's wrong with the Seminoles, if anything at all.

There's only two seniors on the whole team, and just one of them is a starter-shortstop Jody Reed. In fact, six of the nine usual starters for Florida State are either freshmen or sophomores. The pitching staff is almost as young Mike Loynd (8-2), Ray Revak (9-4) and Doug Little (8-5), who are all either freshmen or sophomores, account for 25 of the Seminoles' 39 wins.

While the Seminoles have beaten some nationally ranked teams this year, more often than not, they have gone down in defeat to the top ranked teams

Case in point. This past Thursday and Friday series against 29th ranked South Alabama saw the Seminoles thoroughly trashed at home. South Alabama beat FSU by scores of 12-4 and 12-2.

Following the first loss to South Alabama, FSU assistant coach Randy Gailey said, "Now I know how the other half Gailey was referring to the tremendous beating FSU teams in the past here inflicted on their opponents. But things have changed for the Seminoles

"We'll come back," Gailey said after the first loss to South Alabama "We get down from time to time, but we come back "

If the past two games against Florida International are any indication, then Gailey is right. The Seminoles crushed the Sunblazers 10-3 and 12-3

Things won't get any easier for the Seminoles, however

After taking nearly a week off for final exams, Florida State will face Tulane for a three-game home stand, then travel for a single game against South Alabama before finishing against Southern Miss and Memphis State. As of April 15, Tulane was 34-8, while Memphis State was 20-7

Other notable dates for the Seminoles this season have

Feb. 10-18-The Seminoles posted their longest win streak of the year-eight games-during this period. Included in 3 the streak were three wins against South Florida and one against Georgia Tech. Georgia Tech, however, cathe back the very next day-Feb. 19- and handed the Seminoles one of their worst losses ever at home, 15-2.

Feb. 15-March 4-Saw the Seminoles travel to Miami and lose to the Hurricanes twice-7-0 and 14-5. But FSU was able to salvage the last game of the series, 7-6. Following the win against the Hurricanes, ISU was able to

But a six-game road trip to the West Coast-March 6. 11-saw FSU lose five straight games-three to Nevada Las Vegas and two to Cal State Fullerton

From March 19-25, FSU was able to reel off another seven game winning streak. Included in the streak was an 18-16 victory over then-ranked Alabama

But FSU saw its streak end when they travelled to Clemson, S.C., and were taken apart by the Tigers, 13-0 and 13-3.

Two games in Tallahassee against Horida saw FSU split with the Gators 11-3 and then 11-9. Again, FSU went on the road, and again they were hammered. This time by Jacksonville, 10-2 and 10-8

COMPILED BY CURT FIELDS

Judging from reader response, the last Flambeau sports quiz went over fairly well, so well in fact, we decided to do another one. This one is only ten questions instead of 41 and it is limited to the subjects of professional baseball and professional baseball. We also think this one is just a little easier, but still a fair challenge. Here's hoping you appreciate trista as much as we do. To see how well you did, check out the answers on page 31. But don't look until you have taken the whole quiz.

1. A little known player for the Oakland As saved his best for last in 1972. In the regular season, after spending much of it on the bench, he started the final two months, batting 225 with five homers. In the American League playoffs his average stayed below 100. However, he became the offensive start of the World Series that year with four home runs and nine RBIs. Name him.

2. This pitcher broke in with the Giants in 1952. He pitched for several teams including the Indians, Orioles, White Sox, and Braves. When he retired in the early '70s, he had pitched in 1,070 games, baffling hitters with his knuckler. Name him.

3. Name the winning pitchers in the 1968 World Series for the winning Detroit Ligers

4. Who was the first commissioner of the American Basketball Association?

5 In 1968, the Philadelphia 76ers traded Wilt Chamberlain to the Los Angeles Lakers Who/What did the 76ers receive in return?

6 Who was the first player to go directly from high school to the professional basketball ranks and who signed them?

7 Who is credited with saying, "Being with a woman all night never hurt no professional baseball player. It's staying up all night looking for a woman that does him in?" (Hint: He was an outfielder turned manager.)

8. Who was nicknamed the "Human Rain Delay?"

9. Who said "I won't be active in the day-to-day operations of the club at all. I can't spread myself so thin.

I've got enough headaches with my shoppy company?"

Hubbard pleased with Rattlers' spring performance

Charles Bevel, who carried the ball seven times for 44 yards in Saturday's Orange and Green game, will be back to give the Rattlers a solid rushing game next season.

There was no big crowd, no official time kept. Actually, there was really no hoopla at

But nevertheless, the Horida A&M football squad quietly finished its 1984 spring practice Saturday afternoon, and head coach Rudy Hubbard said afterward that he liked what he saw in the annual Orange and Green

"It's a good place to stop," he said. "I hated to stop on an interception, but it's okas." Hubbard was speaking of the scrimmage ending interception by Tyrone Kesler of a Calvin Giles pass.

For several reasons, Hubbard decided to have a regular scriminage Saturday, instead of having a game much like Florida State's Garnet and Gold game. Basically, it's too much of a pain, according to Hubbard.

"It's different. First of all, it takes a lot of time," he explained "You spend a lot of time working with guys you may not be using in the fall, anyway. When you start doing that kind of thing, you're putting on a show It's become a show so much that you forget what you're doing "

Instead, Hubbard wanted to simply practice, which is what it's all about. "This is spring practice. I came out here and coached, worked with the players and didn't sit over there on the sidelines and put on a show for the fans," Hubbard said

What few fans did come to Bragg Stadium were treated nonetheless to some pretty exciting football, as Giles directed the firstunit offense to a touchdown over the second was filling in for injured Mike Kelly, clearly established himself as Kelly's backup by completing six of 10 passes for 115 yards.

"I like Calvin Giles," Hubbard said with a grin "I thought Calvin did a very good job for us out there. He's very tough. You hear all that crunching going on out there, and he'll take a big hit and be the first one up."

"I felt I did pretty good today," Giles "I was pretty fortunate to be working behind the first unit line. That helped me a lot. My goal is to be number one

On Saturday, that offensive line showed Hubbard he may actually have a stable area there for a change. It was something he had hoped and worked for this spring. "We feel good about our line, and it's been a long time since we've been able to say that," Hubbard "The first four games of last season, the guards we had there are not the starters

Now, Hubbard says, the group will have to get in better shape. Several of the players reported to spring practice either overweight or out of shape or both. A stronger team will be essential for next season, he said. "They came out of the field house reads to play football. Now they got to get in shape. It's going to be interesting to see just how strong we can get," Hubbard said

While the team may need to get in shape, its overall performance Saturday impressed Hubbard One group that impressed Hubbard was the running back corps, led by sophomore to-be Iony Barber,

FSU men's basketball team ends season on an up note

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS

Boosted by two junior college transfers and a talented freshman, the Florida State men's basketball team posted a 20-11 record and earned a bid to the National Institutional Tournament this season

After advancing to the second round with a victory over North Carolina State, the Seminoles fell to Pitt 66-63 and were eliminated

The season was a windfall for head coach Joe Williams, who received a three-year contract extension after coming under fire in recent years for his team's performance

Working with three new starters, the Seminoles got off to a relatively slow start, losing to Marathon Oil by a whopping 113-77 score in an exhibition game

But, with patience and hard work, the Seminoles were able to put together some fairly impressive wins, including a 67-60 victory over Florida in the first half of the season.

Junior Alton Lee Gipson, Dean Shaffer and freshman Randy Allen helped fill voids in the Seminole attack that had been missing for several years. Though not a particularly strong rebounder, Gipson gave the Seminoles strong scoring inside. He also improved his rebounding and shot-blocking in the final games of the season. Shaffer, a transfer from Merced. Calif., combined with point guard. Tony. William and forward Vince Martello to give the team decent outside shooting, as well as intense hustle.

Allen, a 6-8 forward from Milton, showed promise as a developing power man inside, and also improved down the final stretch

With its overall improvement during the final games of the season, the Seminoles were considered to be the hostest team in the Metro Conference Advancing into the semifinals at the conference tourney in Memphis, the Seminoles dropped a heartbreaker to Memphis State 65-63 in the final seconds. The loss left FSU's regular season record at 19-10. The next day, they received the bid to the NIT.

Hindered by inexperience and injuries, the Florida State women's basketball team struggled through a disappointing 13-18 season, losing in the first round of the Metro tourney to Louisville, 77-66.

The Lady Seminoles received bad news at the beginning of the season when forward Brend Chette announced she was quitting the team in order to concentrate on track. She said she will return next season

Star forward Sue Galkantas missed the first two games with an ankle injury, while walk-on Devon Myers was lost for the season with a broken arm

Rattlerettes shine, while Rattlers don't

BY DAVID LEE SIMMONS

Despite the loss of All-American guard Cynthia Lee to a knee injury, and prized recruit April Manning to grades, the Florida A&M women's basketball squad finished the season with an impressive 19-9 record, barely missing a bid to the National Invitational Tournament

The Rattlerettei had counted on Lee to give them deadly outside shooting. Manning was to be the squad's point guard. But with them both out, head coach Mickey Clayton turned to senior Valerie Robinson and freshman Valerie Seay to fill the respective positions. Normally a passer, Robinson found it difficult to shoot consistently from the outside, while Seay suffered from rookie mistakes in the first part of the season.

With the development of freshman Eisther Myrick and the dependable scoring of Rosa Hudgins, though, the squad put together a decent attack

Perhaps the high point of the season for the Rattlerettes came at the Mid-American Classic, where they upset then Top 20-ranked Auburn

A loss to arch-rival Florida State toward the end of the season, however, ruined any chances of FAMU receiving a bid to the NIT. Clayton said before the season that the Rattlerettes would have to win at least 20 games to be considered for a bid. The team's 19-9 record left it short.

Hudgins led the squad in scoring with 16 points a game, while senior forward Laura Johnson led the team in rebounding with eight caroms a contest. Myrick led in block shots with 1.7 a game.

Because the team was so loaded with freshmen this year (nine), Clayton did not go after recruits this year for lack of scholarships available. Lee and Manning are both expected to return next year, with Robinson and Johnson being the only graduation losses

With its head coach (Josh Giles) resigning one month before the season started, the Florida A&M men's basketball team suffered through a dismal 7-19 year.

Assistant coach Tony Fields took over the reins as interim coach, but was replaced at the end of the season when FAMU hired Willie Booker as the new head coach.

Mervin Jones led the team in scoring with 18 points per

FSU track teams ran well over weekend

BY DAVE PICARIELLO

The banners were flying high Saturday proclaiming the Lady Seminoles Olympic Preview which was held at Florida State's Mike Long Track

Wendy Sly, a middle and long distance great from the British Isles, was easily the star of the meet. Sly, ranked fifth in the world in the 1,500 and 3,000 meters, led from the start in the 3,000 to win her race in 8-47 73.

"Wendy had probably the fastest time in the world so far," Gary Winckler, FSU women's coach, said, "The fact that she said it by herself made the race the highlight of the meet."

Five Lady Noles seniors were honored with roses at the meet. Receiving individual bouquets were Marita Payne, Ovrill Dywer-Brown, Randy Givens, Margaret Coomber and Carla Borovika. The five finished their outstanding collegiate careers at the event.

"It will be very difficult to replace them," Winckler said. "They're very special to me."

Payne and her teammates are credited with helping the FSU women rise to national prominence. Payne is ranked as the fastest collegiate 400-meter runner in the world with a personal best of 50.06.

Givens started a waterfall of outstanding performances for FSU. The senior sprinter fired it on home on the anchor leg of the 4x100-meter relay, pushing Florida State to first place over Auburn in 43-99. Their time was well under the NCAA outdoor qualifying standard. Givens also set a track record in the 100-meter dash of 11-27, good for first place.

"I've been improving on my start and learning to run the 100," Givens said. "Gary has been having me train for the 200 but I want to run the 100 in the trials too."

Wends Markham cleared $'-11\('\)1\" in the high jump, good for third place and a qualifying birth at the NCAA outdoor meet Marie Roberts won the triple jump for the 'Noles. FSU's freshman Janet Levy outkicked the field in the 400-meter dash to win in $4.49. Brenda Cliette won the 200-meter dash, bounding away from the competition after the first 100 meters. Teammate Michelle Finn finished a close second.

The 1,600-meter relay was the final event of the afternoon. The Lady 'Nole foursome of Payne, Givens, Levy and last minute stand-in Clotte tore up the field winning in 3.6.14, good for a new track record.

Other highlights of the meet were the 1,500 and 800 meter runs. Borovicka set a fast pace on the first lap and went on to win in 4.28.0 kelley Hackler sped past Dallas high school standout Stacey Zarter in the final 100 meters to win in 2.08.50, just shy of the NCAA qualifying time.

FSU alumnus Angie Wright dominated the 400 intermediate hurdles. Wright, now with Bud Light-Track America, took the race away from Lady 'Nole Dwyer-Brown in the stretch, winning in 57,12.

On the men's side, Dick Roberts' Garnet and Gold team aron the annual Florida-Florida State dual meet held in Gainesville over the weekend. The 'Noles outgunned the Gators 90-64. FSU holds the overall edge in the series, 19-12.

"The meet started off close with Nick Rahal of Florida winning the long jump in 25-6," Roberts said. "However, we took second and third with Greg Allen and Marc Freeman turning in their best jumps of the year."

FSU softball team made transition

BY DAVID LET SIMMONS

With only one game left in the season (against the University of New Orleans), the Florida State softball team proved this year it could make the transition from slowpitch to fast-pitch

When the NCAA announced last year that slow-pitch was out, head coach JoAnne Graf calmly went out and snagged three talented fast pitch pitchers. Led by junior college transfer Tina Kyler, the corps has led the team to an impressive 39.5-2 record.

According to NCAA officials, ISU is ranked second in the Southern regional behind Louisiana Tech, a team the Lads Seminoles used early in the season. A L2 loss to Nicholls State may have killed any chance of the squad from getting an atlarge bid to the NCAA playoffs, but ESU monetheless established itself as a force to be reckoned with once again.

While the team not only had to make the transition, it also had to go without All-American and co-MVP Darby Cottle. The Lady Noles were also without the services of co-MVP LeeAnn Harrell for the most part of the season, and senior Dina Cooper, who sat out the season with an injury.

With the help of Greta Bahn, who replaced Cottle at shortstop, and Robin Pace, who filled in for Cooper, the Lady Noles persevered. Bahn, in fact, has more or less been able to replace Cottle's bat, averaging 323 this season.

INTRAMURAL SPORTS HIGHLIGHTS

HOME RUN DERBY CHAMPS CROWNED

The first hopefully annual Miller High Life Home Run Derby took place at the Lady Seminole field last week. Thirty-nine eager strokers showed up to flex their muscles, but when it was all over only these folks stood at the head of their class. Manny Mendoza, Laurie Gigicos, Tim Brown, and the Kappia Alpha team of John Farrell, Dave Baldwin, and Pat O'Neal. Prizes for the winners were graciously donated by Spearman Distributors.

SOFTBALL CHAMPIONS ...

The constant threat of rain and the high winds played havoc with most of the nearly 250 learns that started the season, but when the dust had settled six team stood atop their respective division. Unclaimed Freight claimed the women's title and the All-Campus Women's title Alpha Delta was tops for the sororities.

The Generics were the cream of the dormitory crop while the Pig Dogs and Pikes took their respective divisions. The All-Campus tourney was a rematch of the football final as the Pikes and Dogs squared off, this time the Dogs came up on the short end of the bone, falling 3-2 in nine innings. The Pikes went on to defeat the Generics 6-0 in the final Spring softball game and claim bragging rights until Spring 1985.

In the Co-Rec division the Shed took top honors by stopping the talented Varsity Biophysics squad by a 5-4 score. Congratulations to all our winners.

SUPERSTARS ...

The battle for the overall trophy may have hinged on the superstars events. The Lambda Chi's battled the Pikes, SAE's, and Sigma Nu's for the superstars title, while the Theta Chi's desperately needing a first could only manage a 6th place finish.

TRACK AND FIELD

Despite the cool night air, the gusting winds, and the threat of rain hundreds of diehards showed up at the track to compete in the Intramural Track and Field Championships. In the end Random Motion and Da Fleet Feet took the honors in their respective divisions. In the sorority division the Delta Gamma's took top honors while the Tekes and Pikes garnered the Fraternity titles.

This was our first meet on the new track (400 meters instead of 440 yards) so all the winners are also record holders. The outstanding performances included two new field event records. Charlotte Jones in the women's Shot Put with a loss 40'4" and J. T. Stockton in the high jump with a leap of 6'8".

The voting for the outstanding female and male athlete was close J. T. Stockton took the honor for the men and Narguerite Moynihan edged Patronica Williams by one vote to garner the women's award Congratulations to all the athletes.

slippery tailback from Vero Beach ran nine times for 79 yards, solidifying his spot as the number one runner. "Tony Barber to me is going to be a premier tailback for us," Hubbard said

Fullback Charles Bevel, normally a htursing type of runner, showed more on seven carries. Hubbard noticed the difference. "We geared him down this practice," Hubbard said. "He's much nore under control now when he runs. When he gets his peripheral vision, he's hard to bring down

Barber and Bevel both had a good day, but were not alone. Backing up Bevel at fullback, Curtis Burns gained 43 yards on six carries, including a 25-yard run-Reginald Jones picked up 24 yards on five

The receivers also had a good day, and Hubbard said he believes they will be able to compensate for the loss of All-American Ray Alexander. Tight end Todd Williams led the group with three catches for 64 yards, while flanker Lewis Bennett and tight end Leroy Montgomery each had two receptions. With starting split end Billy Wilson out with a shoulder injury, sophomore Robert Gentile stepped in and caught a spectacular pass from Carl Williams. Leaping high for the ball, Gentile then did a somersault as he was upended by a defender and still held on the

"To me it seems those are always the only I catch," Gentile said. "We've been working more on our passing game than our running game

"I'm trying to follow in Ray (Alexander's) footsteps. I would like to be a better receiver than Ray was. That's one of my goals

Everything you wanted to know about the upcoming Summer Olympics

This Summer Olympic Games may see a sporting first women outperforming men in the same event-the Marathon. Women will get their first chance to compete in the long-distance race in this Summer's Games, and predictions are they will have a faster time than the men-if the weather is hot. Physical education professor Christine Wells says that's because women runners don't sweat as much, and are less likely to suffer from dehydration. The Marathon is just one area where female athletes are closing the gender gap. Women are breaking world records at a far faster pace than men, and, in running and swimming events, now achieve up to 92 percent of the best male performances.

What's America's fastest growing company? Here's a hint. It's in L.A. And it's expanding by leaps and bounds. Four years ago, it had only two employees. Now it has a 1,000 and it will employ 50,000 by this summer. Have you got it? It's the L.A. Olympic Organizing Committee, which has 20 departments warming up for everything from transportation and food service to protocol and security. All this will come to a quick finish at summer's end when the ittee sings its swan song-or torch song-and goes out of business forever

It's a banner year for a California flag-maker. Pageantry World of Pasadena says it's perfected a pilfer-proof pennant for the Olympics. Special sleeves hold the flags to the poles to keep over-zealous competitors from taking them home as souvenirs. At previous olympics, agile athletes even climbed greased flagpoles to heist the flags. Organizers hope to raise money by selling the official banners of the '84 Olympics when the games are over, and nearly all of their 4,000 flags survived Sarajevo.

They've finally picked the "official music supplier" to the Summer Olympics. No, it's not Boy George or even the Eurhythmics. It's that All-American favorite.. Muzak, Olympic officials evidently hope the elevator music will lift the level of athletic competition.

This Summer's Olympics are presenting a serious hurdle to another Los Angeles institution...the movie business. Some of the year's biggest films are scheduled to be released just as the games are getting under way. Hollywood is attempting to cut its losses by shifting several release dates to late spring or early fall. But things could get worse: movie moguls are hoping presidential the race doesn't heat up, otherwise viewers will have another reason to stay home and watch the tube.

The U.S. Olympic Track Team has run into controversy—over its uniforms. Coaches and athletes say the gray and blue outfits recall the colors of the Confederacy Women's track coach Brooks Johnson calls it insensitive to ask black athletes to wear the symbols of the Old South. Savs Johnson, "It's a travesty. We'll look like the Jefferson Davis track team."

Los Angeles' tourist attractions are gearing up for the Olympic trade, but foreign visitors may show more interest in shopping. Olympic officials entertaining advance delegations from abroad say our guests are passing up Disneyland and Universal Studios. But they're making a beeline for the nearest supermarket, where they're loading up on such exotic items as instant coffee, canned fish and plastic shower curtains. Another favorite is the western-wear store Says one Olympic spokesman: "Even people in communist countries know about John Wayne.
